*'O brave new world!'
Miranda was proclaiming the possibility of loveliness, the possibility of transforming even the nightmare into something fine and noble.
'O brave new world!'
It was a challenge, a command.*

Aldous Huxley, Brave New World

In this spring of 1984 we are called to look at ourselves, our world, and our future. George Orwell's 1984 and Aldous Huxley's Brave New World call us to examine the persons we've become and the society we've crafted. But what we see need not reflect their nightmarish projections. If our experiences at La Salle have taught us anything, they have taught us of the potential that exists in the heart and mind and soul of each individual. The possibilities that exist for the 'brave new world' envisioned by Miranda call to each one of us as we face this catalytic year.

For La Salle, 1984 is characterized by dynamism and fellowship. The construction of a new dormitory and dining hall has expanded the residential facilities, enabling more students to live on campus and participate in residential life. The addition of a Director of Academic Computing and a Director of Long-Range Planning to the administration also reflects an anticipation of the needs of tomorrow. Discussion of La Salle's future as college or university highlights the continual process of evaluation and self scrutiny at the College. And involvement in the Campus Boulevard Corporation, the Small Business Development Center and the Urban Studies Center reaffirms La Salle's commitment to the people and institutions of Philadelphia.

The giving spirit of La Salle is also shown in projects ranging from walkathons and the Committee on Appalachian Life to the Special Olympics and Play Day. Students express their concerns for the future through organizations such as Mobilization for Survival, Pax Christi, and the Hunger Task Force. They work toward their own goals, striving for excellence in the classroom and on the playing field. And their progress is encouraged by dedicated faculty, who shape their education and help equip them to face the challenges of 1984 and beyond.

The story that unfolds on the pages of this Explorer is a testament to the many individuals, ideas and experiences that comprise La Salle College 1984. It's your story. And it's just begun.

Brother Gilbert Jude Sapane

In the summer of 1936 a young Christian Brother enrolled in a class at La Salle College. Before the semester ended, however, he was reaching the course, having assumed the duties of his infirmed professor. For Brother Gilbert Jude Sapane, this action was characteristic of his ability, versatility, and unselfish commitment to education.

Born in Pittsburgh, and raised there and in Boston, Brother Jude became interested in teaching at an early age. While in the seventh grade, he was impressed by the dedication of a teacher who helped him tutor his younger brother, who was suffering from whooping cough. The influence of a nun who later taught him Latin confirmed in him the desire to teach in a religious environment. He entered the Christian Brothers' community on September 7, 1933, and is celebrating his Golden Jubilee this year.

As an undergraduate, Brother Jude attended La Salle College and Catholic University, receiving his B.A. from La Salle in 1939. He also studied at the University of Pittsburgh, earning a Master of Letters in Latin in 1948 and a Ph.D. in the Classics in 1953.

Brother Jude has taught throughout the Christian Brothers' system. He found his first experience, reaching first graders, especially enjoyable. In 1951, he assumed a permanent teaching position at La Salle, and, with the exception of six years spent in Pittsburgh, has taught here continuously since. He taught business curriculum for nearly his first decade at La Salle. In addition, he took evening classes in religion, obtaining his M.A. in Theology from the College in 1958. As a member of the Foreign Languages Department, he has taught classes in his forte, the classical languages Latin and Greek, and in the modern languages French, German, Italian and Spanish. He has also taught courses in Religion, and, more recently, in Medical Terminology. He has found that, even teaching secular subjects, he is able to help students with problems of a moral nature.

While at Pittsburgh, Brother Jude became involved in the Virgilian Society of America. For the past thirteen years he has been Assistant Director of the Society, conducting extensive tours of Italy, France, Ireland, Spain, Egypt, North Africa, Asia Minor, Israel, Yugoslavia and Switzerland. He has been involved in excavations and is often called on for his specialty, epigraphy, the interpretation of ancient inscriptions. He is able to explain to his fellow travellers, for example, frescos and mosaics in Pompeii and Greece. To be standing on the walls of Troy, he remarks, "makes everything you teach so alive."

It is as the classics professor at La Salle that Brother Jude is best known to us. He has been able to share his vast knowledge of the language, history, and mythology of the classical periods with countless students, and many of his peers as well. Dr. Bernhardt Blumenthal, a former student of Brother Jude and Chairperson of the Foreign Languages Department, recalls Brother Jude as a demanding instructor. Dr. Blumenthal cites Brother Jude's unrivaled expertise, saying, "He's a fantastic resource for this department." He also notes that Brother Jude is largely responsible for keeping the study of the classics alive for evening students.

Dr. Leo Rudnytzky, another former student and colleague of Brother Jude in the Foreign Languages Department, remarks that Brother Jude treats his students "as if they were his own children." Brother Jude strives to maintain a relationship of mutual respect with his students. He insists on conducting his classes in a small seminar room, personally fixing up the classroom before any students arrive. He says he enjoys cleaning his blackboard and table, especially of graffiti that is not "classical." His students applaud his enthusiasm and his great sense of humor. Well-rounded in his approach to life, he is able to apply ideas from classical literature to twentieth century life and to express in modern terms the ancient Greek and Roman concepts of virtue and honor.

Brother Jude feels it is important for teachers to stay alive and see the viewpoints of their students, stating, "It's nice teaching and being with young people because it makes you feel young." Just as his Latin teacher inspired him, he tries to inspire others to go into education. Lecturing with precision, he tries to teach a subject in a manner that will show his students how to teach it. In fact, Brother Jude taught a few of his current La Salle colleagues while they were high school students, and quite a few more while they were students at La Salle. He prides himself on the fact that over a dozen of his former students are now college professors teaching Latin and Greek.

Brother Jude has enriched La Salle with his consummate expertise, his Christian humility, and his delightful personality. It is with pride that the 1984 Explorer is dedicated to one who, in the words of a current student, is "an educator par excellence."

That's Entertainment

The advent of summer means more than just vacations or summer classes at La Salle. The sounds of music drift from the doors of the College Union as costumes, furniture, and pieces of scenery are carried past them. The Dan Rodden Theatre is a hive of activity, and the Snack Bar dining room has been renamed "The Carousel Room." It's all for one reason — La Salle Music Theatre is about to begin another season of summer entertainment.

It's been going strong for 23 seasons this year, and it shows no signs of quitting. It does, however, show the signs of change. The economic and social realities of the 80's are leaving their mark on every aspect of life, and the Music Theatre, with the rest of the entertainment world, is no exception. It is the challenge of the Music Theatre today to answer those realities and still maintain the excellent reputation it has earned during the course of 23 summers.

Brother Gene Graham, F.S.C., has been both producer and director of the Music Theatre since 1978, and he is the man largely responsible for bringing it into the 80's. He chooses the shows to be done each summer and runs the open auditions. The latter are basically the same every year: an advertisement is placed in the local newspapers, and alumni and members of the community, as well as students, try out. Choosing a show, however, presents difficulties. Designedly, no show has ever been repeated. In addition, some shows are too dared for an 80's audience. And others simply aren't the stuff of which summer music theatre is made.

"Our audience wants to be entertained, not challenged," Brother Graham explains. Upbeat, litring productions like South Pacific are very popular, while bold, dramatic tragedies like West Side Story are less so. A choice must be made accordingly. Finally, the rising cost of production has led the Music Theatre to adopt the practice of doing one major show rather than two. In place of the second show, a revue is done, spotlighting the work of a major musical composer or team. Brother Graham spends hours listening to songs, and tries, in the final selection, to mix the famous with the forgotten.

The combination of major show and musical revue keeps productions costs (as well as ticket prices) down, but financial economies are not the only ones practiced today. Economy of time is important, too. Shows that lasted three hours in the 50's have been streamlined to two hours for an 80's audience by cutting the "padding" that fills many of them. More time is saved by allowing the audience to see the sets being moved as a scene ends, an accepted theatrical practice now. In the end, judicious timesaving keeps the production moving without any "deadness" and the audience's thoughts stay with the story.

The Music Theatre serves several purposes today. Its founder, the late Dan Rodden, viewed it as a training ground in musical comedy for young people, and through the years, it has utilized the talents of hundreds of young performers. It was their vitality and enthusiasm that first won rave reviews for the Music Theatre and contributed to the excellent reputation it still enjoys. On another level, Brother Graham believes that it is an important public relations vehicle that brings hundreds of community members onto campus every summer. Many come every year, and they leave with a good impression of the College. In addition, students from other schools have been known to transfer to La Salle after spending a summer with the Music Theatre. Still the only college in the country to sponsor a professional summer music theatre, La Salle benefits from its unique advantage. Undeniably, the passing years have left their mark on the Music Theatre, but it is to its credit that it has met the changes and made them work. Music Theatre still provides an evening of quality Broadway entertainment without any of Broadway's expenses or inconveniences. For a summer evening's theatrical entertainment, it can't be beat.

Special Athletes

With the ceremonial lighting of the torch, the first annual La Salle Eastern Regional Pennsylvania Special Olympics swim competition began in Hayman Hall on April 30, 1983.

The Special Olympics became a reality at La Salle mostly through the help of the Philadelphia Sports Association and through funding and volunteers from Syntex Dental Products.

Each of the seventy special athletes in attendance competed in different swimming events throughout the day. The events included freestyle, breaststroke, backstroke, and relay. The athletes were also grouped according to age and sex. Five athletes were involved in each event and all who participated received medals.

Each athlete was given at least one "hugger". These "huggers," many of whom were La Salle students, cheered their athletes on during their designated events.

Between swimming events, athletes had the opportunity to play basketball or soccer. Aerobic dancing and an activity room were also provided for all those interested. Lunch was served for everyone in the ballroom, followed by a variety show that included a magician, a gymnast, and a juggler.

Some special guests who participated in the Special Olympics included AM Philadelphia's Janet Davies, Brother Patrick Ellis, assorted clowns, and La Salle's own Explorer. Brother Patrick helped open the Special Olympics with his rendition of the National Anthem. Ms. Davies acted as a "hugger" and distributed medals to all of the participants. The clowns provided toys for the athletes while the Explorer entertained them.

All those involved deemed the event an overwhelming success. "We had a great time," remarked Associate Athletic Director Joe O'Donnell. "We hope to do it again."

Children at Heart

Play Day, a day of activities for special children and their families, was developed last spring by La Salle's Council for Exceptional Children. A student organization dedicated to serving special children, the Council for Exceptional Children (CEC) wanted to bring handicapped children and their families together to experience the joy of play and to rediscover one another as children at heart. Thirty children who were either severely and profoundly impaired or trainably mentally retarded were invited to participate along with their parents or guardians. The members of CEC encouraged all of La Salle to join them in spending this rewarding, heart warming day with exceptional people in what they hoped would become an annual campus event.

Like students in any organization planning an activity, the members of CEC spent many late afternoons and free periods preparing for Play Day. Their efforts were visible to all on campus as they sponsored a "Cookie Day" and popcorn sale in the College Union to raise money for their Play Day fund. Most importantly, they drew upon the lessons they learned in their education classes and through their field work to prepare for the special needs of their guests. Special Education majors at La Salle, who are participating in one of the best Special Education programs in the state, are exposed to exceptional children and professionals practicing in the field during each phase of their undergraduate careers.

Throughout Play Day, CEC members were assisted by volunteers from the fraternity Pi Kappa Phi and the sorority Gamma Sigma Sigma in decorating rooms, serving lunch, and ushering people throughout the College Union. CEC members directed their guests in individual as well as group activities aimed at enhancing motor development and fostering cooperative play. The group activity "bear the drum," for example, was designed to encourage eye-hand coordination and attending skills. The recreational and educational activities also included ball rolling, sponge painting, "hot potato" and dancing.

CEC members hoped to give the families something which they could continue doing with their children long after Play Day was over. Recognizing that regression, one of the biggest problems in the field of special education, occurs most often outside of the school setting, they prepared a "touch board" for the children to take home with them. This consisted of a piece of cardboard and materials of varying textures which could be pasted on the board in the shape of the child's hand and felt for tactile stimulation. One kindhearted CEC member even donated trophies to give to each special child in attendance. But, judging from the smiles and laughter of the children, participation in Play Day was prize enough.

Adding to the Comfort and Convenience of La Salle

The latest additions to the La Salle residence community include St. Katharine Hall, a beautiful new dormitory, and the North Halls Complex dining hall. Together, they have made "coming home" to resident life a new and exciting experience at La Salle.

Construction of the $6.5 million dormitory project began in early September, 1982. This operation ran according to schedule, making more living accommodations available to students in the Fall of 1983.

Initially, the construction of the new dormitory was an inconvenience. Residents had to adjust to an increased noise level, which made sleeping and studying difficult. The administration had to deal with opposition from several community groups, including the Belfield Area Neighborhood Association (BANA), which felt that La Salle was too aggressive in acquiring land. There were also complaints from students and faculty who feared that available parking space would dwindle. All of these problems have now been surmounted.

St. Katharine, the first dormitory built since La Salle went co-ed in 1970, houses over 300 students. In addition to single rooms, there are double rooms available in two styles. Some rooms have shared bathroom facilities, while others have only basins inside. There are also TV lounge areas, a game room, a laundry room, three kitchenettes, and a spacious outdoor quad. The new dormitory alleviates La Salle's previous space problem, enabling students from Philadelphia to live on campus and eliminating the need to place three students in a double room. It also provides more study space for students.

The North Halls Complex dining facilities have been designed to provide the most comfortable and convenient eating arrangements. The new cafeteria relieves the congestion of fourth and fifth period lunch-goers, providing not only space, but a quicker flow at the cashier as well. As the new facilities opened, a controversial policy restricting the use of meal cards in the College Union was instituted. It was feared that the new arrangement would separate commuters and residents, but this has not proven to be a major problem. The new cafeteria has also created employment possibilities for community adults and youths, as more food service jobs have become available.

Presently, all are satisfied: resident students have a new dormitory comparable to those of a large university, neighboring communities have a new avenue for employment, and parking is available on the newly opened Belfield Avenue, as well as on the Good Shepherd property and the main parking lot. La Salle also has the advantage of taking on a larger enrollment of resident students. The popularity of St. Katharine has spread from residents to commuters and neighbors alike. La Salle students will share the joy of "coming home" for many semesters to come.

"Shakespeare is not the Bible"

For one week in October, La Salle was privileged to host five actors from the Royal Shakespeare Company. The five performers (Heather Canning, John Kane, Christopher Ravenscroft, Edwin Richfield, and Jennie Stoller) belong to an organization known as Actors in Residence (AIR), a group composed of 61 actors from the Royal Shakespeare Company. All AIR members are volunteers who participate in one-week campus residencies. AIR is sponsored in the United States by The Association for Creative Theatre Education & Research (ACTER). All arrangements for the group's appearance were made by Dr. Barbara Millard of the English department. Millard, having previously encountered the program, remarked that the visit was quite an enriching experience, for "the performed word is always more meaningful than the written word."

The actors presented a series of workshops in classes and for organizations. Workshop topics included Hamlet, The Merchant of Venice, Waiting for Godot, dynamics of theatre, soliloquies, film comedy, and Shakespeare's women. Edwin Richfield, utilizing a selection from A Midsummer Night's Dream, demonstrated the effective use of voice in reading lyrical scripts for the Masque, while Jennie Stoller held a workshop on forceful speech delivery for the Gavel.

The actors also performed a five-actor version of The Merchant of Venice, with Stoller as Portia, Richfield as Shylock, Ravenscroft as Bassanio, Kane as Antonio, and Canning as Nerissa. Each performer had multiple roles in this production, which was held on two nights that week. For the Concert and Lecture Series, Ravenscroft and Canning presented "The Tarnished Phoenix," a dramatic portrait of D.H. Lawrence based upon his poems and his letters and the memoirs of his wife, Frieda. A dramatic reading of Dylan Thomas' Under Milk Wood was also done by the five performers.

Edwin Richfield stated that he enjoyed working in the United States because the American voice is more akin to Shakespeare's English than present-day "Queen's" English. Richfield also found that Americans have a fresh approach to Shakespeare and that they are more willing to laugh at a piece than their British counterparts. He emphasized the point that "Shakespeare is not the Bible;" it is something that was meant to be performed, not analyzed. In the workshops, Richfield tried "to bring the text up off the page — to make it alive." He, and the other actors, succeeded.

The Voice of La Salle's Faculty

A La Salle education is a La Salle education because of our Faculty. While the talents and hard work of those who lead, advise, counsel, repair, clean, and administer are vital for the experience to be effective, it is the teaching and the student/professor interaction that goes with it that are the heart of a La Salle education.

Because the Faculty are at the core of La Salle's life, they are concerned about all the decisions and policies that touch the educational process. To some extent input from the Faculty comes through the academic department. Beyond that, however, the Faculty express their concerns and opinions through the Faculty Senate.

The Faculty Senate is made up of eighteen full-time faculty members drawn from all ranks and elected by their peers. As one might expect, part of the Senate's work involves representing the Faculty in salary negotiations and re-

CBC: A Success Story

In order for La Salle to have remained a vital institution, true to its purpose and successful in its intended endeavors, the school must necessarily have actively met challenges and undergone many changes since its inception. Perhaps one of the most dynamic changes that La Salle has activated recently is the birth of the Campus Boulevard Corporation.

Formed to breach neighborhood communication barriers and to unite representatives of various local businesses, schools, and health care centers, the Corporation grew from an idea of Brother Patrick Ellis, who acts as Chairperson for the group. Since its genesis as the Campus Boulevard Consortium in 1978, the CBC's major goal has been, "to make the Campus Boulevard Corridor a strong employment center, a desirable business and shopping area, and a pleasant environment in which to live, worship, obtain a quality education and/or health care."

From the very start, La Salle has played a major role in the Corporation. CBC President William Miller's offices, now located in space donated by Continental Bank at 5901 Old York Road, were originally located on campus. La Salle students helped to facilitate much of the original work by interviewing over 100 local businesses, patrolling neighborhoods for abandoned cars and sanitation violations, and surveying 4300 houses to determine the safety status of each. Since that time, the neighborhood has achieved a significantly higher public safety rating, which has drawn more business to the area and helped to persuade numerous local businesses, such as First Pennsylvania Bank, not only to remain in the neighborhood but to sink money into remodeling.

Fully 128 million dollars has been generated by local businesses, and this imports and acts as a joining spot for a number of established neighborhoods such as Olney, Germantown, Logan, and West Oak Lane.

As local institutions have begun to realize the wealth of neighborhood institutions, the role of the CBC has grown into that of a catalyst for growth. Some of the projects it has furthered, either directly or indirectly, have had a great effect on the La Salle community in particular. These include the purchase of what is now St. Teresa Court and the construction of St. Katharine Hall, the new dining facilities, and additional walkways throughout the campus. Other less obvious changes include the cosmetic remodeling of Germantown Hospital, which, in its design and use of wrought-iron fencing, creates a union which extends through La Salle's property. The College donated a piece of Good Shepherd property to facilitate the hospital's revitalization and the hospital has donated property to La Salle for parking space. Another major coup of the CBC has been the commitment of the City and SEPTA to the remodeling of the Broad and Olney subway station and bus terminal, which is now in the "engineering design phase."

Although these are just a few of the CBC's successes, its generation of neighborhood spirit, along with the physical changes it has effected, have allowed La Salle to expand and grow into a stronger, more vital institution in a healthier and happier environment.

pressive private investment has been proportionally met with government funds. Besides making the neighborhood a much safer place to live and work, the CBC has brought the area to the attention of city politicians, stressing its undeniable importance as a business center that employs approximately 9,000 per-

A Place to Worship, to Relax, and to Learn

Campus Ministry at La Salle is both a place and an atmosphere. Although the Campus Ministry Center is located next to de La Salle Chapel, the influence of its activities reaches far beyond there, and in some cases, beyond the campus. Campus Ministry is officially directed by three professionals: Brother Charles "Chip" Echelmeir, Ms. Lori Pompa, and Sister Margaret Kelly.

Brother Chip earned his Bachelors degree in English from Franklin and Marshall College and did graduate work in English with a specialty in Modern European Drama at Lehigh University, Temple University, the University of Albuquerque, and the University of Notre Dame. He earned a degree in Pastoral Theology from Notre Dame. Arriving at La Salle in 1977, Brother Chip worked in the Resident Life Department of the College. He became Director of Campus Ministry the following year. The purpose of Campus Ministry, according to Brother Chip, can be described on two levels, one being "to provide ways for students, faculty, and staff to exercise faith, including worship situations, volunteer work, etc." The other level on which Campus Ministry functions is a more subtle one, in which the center "assists the College in embodying its identity as a religious higher educational institution."

Lori Pompa earned a B.A. in Religious Studies and a B.S. in English Education from Villanova University. She taught Religion for a year at Archbishop Wood High School, and for three years at Notre Dame Academy in Villanova, Pa. She worked for one year at the Department of Youth Activities in Center City, and has participated in many service-related jobs, for example, involvement with HEC (Handicapped Encounter Christ) and serving street people at Dwelling Place. She serves as guitarist and singer in La

Salle's liturgical folk group, which usually provides music at the Sunday evening liturgy. Lori was also a member of a group who recorded an album of liturgical music called "He Shall Be Peace."

Lori's involvement in ministry has evolved out of a belief that "you don't have to be part of a religious community per se, to be involved spiritually in the lives of other people." Her ministry at La Salle is varied — she serves as a counselor, conversationalist, resource person for programming, and as a moderator of groups related to the Campus Ministry Center. Lori feels that ministry is part of why we are here; she says that "being together and moving one another forward in growth is moving the whole world forward. We are invited to be an active part of the evolutionary process."

Sister Margaret Kelly, a Sister of Mercy, attended college at Villanova and received a B.S. in Education. She attended Manhattanville College in Purchase, N.Y., where she earned a B.A. in Sacred Music. At Temple University she earned a Masters degree in Music Education. While there, she worked in the Psycho-Educational Processes Program. Sister Margaret has taught at many grade levels, from elementary to secondary school. She served as principal of Waldron Academy, and in 1978 she came to La Salle. Sister Margaret, or "Sister Peg" as she is affectionately called by those who know her, sees the major role of Campus Ministry as a form of service: "sharing, supporting, giving to others." The Campus Ministry, she says, "provides avenues of service for those who want to work." Sister Peg is intimately involved in the planning of liturgies.

A large part of the liturgical area of Campus Ministry is taken care of by two quiet people who celebrate Mass for the campus — Father Brendan Smith, and Father Maurice Schepers. Both Rev. Brendan and Rev. Maury are peaceful and soft-spoken, but their quiet is hardly indicative of a lack of interest or involvement. Both priests have been active in the planning of the activities of the new peace-issues group, Pax Christi, and Father Brendan is a regular participant in Hunger Task Force activities. The issues of social justice are often addressed in their sermons, and the messages given are often applicable to everyday campus life. Masses at La Salle are enriched by the presence and creativity of these two priests.

The activities of Campus Ministry are varied, and depend on an ever-changing network of individuals. Campus Ministry moderates groups such as Hunger Task Force, Pax Christi (a new group interested in viewing peace issues from a Christian perspective), Clown Ministry, C.O.A.L. (Committee On Appalachian Life), Weekly Prayer Group, and Liturgical Music Group. Hillel, a social and religious group for Jewish students on campus, meets regularly in the Campus Ministry Center and sponsors weekly "Deli Lunches" which are famous on campus. This year La Salle welcomes Barry Blum as Coordinator of Hillel.

Although Campus Ministry provides "a forum in which students can investigate their religious beliefs," Brother Chip emphasizes that "Campus Ministry encourages the same type of discovery anywhere else it is found on campus." Campus Ministry plays an important role in making students aware of the scope of religious experience in their day-to-day lives by providing a place to worship, to relax, and to learn.

Herald of Thought, Vanguard of Excellence

From atop Flagpole Hill of Fairmount Park's Belmont Plateau, the skyline of the City of Philadelphia dominates the horizon. In the crisp air of an autumn afternoon, one gets the impression of a peaceful stronghold of art, industry, and technology, as yet unwilling to demonstrate the tremendous power of its history and of its people. The anticipation of some catalytic event that could ignite within the heart of this sleeping giant the realization of any portion of its incredible potential races through the mind like the wind across the face of this vantage point.

In the eyes of a student who has been willing to expand the horizon of the mind, La Salle College can also be seen as a great secret waiting to be told. Here too lies within the potential to become an even greater harbor of thought, creativity, and being. But this secret has already begun to leak out to those who have been willing to experience La Salle for all that it is. For within the heart of this institution does burn the ember of a catalyst waiting to spark the flame of becoming in any student open to inquisitiveness. The prophet for many students at La Salle is John Grady, Director of the Honors Program.

Having spent his early life no farther than two miles from the area of 20th and Olney, it was with ease that Mr. Grady returned from the University of Notre Dame, where he majored in Economics, to La Salle College, taking up residence in the Economics Department in 1960. Through the mid 60's, he was the Director of Debate and led La Salle's debating team, The Gavel, to the first state championship in the history of the College. In 1969 Mr. Grady became part-time Director of the Honors Program. This developed into a full time occupation with the evolution of the Honors Program into its present structure by 1974. In addition to his directorship, Mr. Grady also reaches in the M.B.A. program and oversees the awarding of competitive and Christian Brothers' scholarships to incoming freshmen and the application for Fulbright and Rhodes fellowships by graduating seniors. For his efforts and excellence in teaching, he was selected for the Lindback Foundation award in 1972.

Mr. Grady encourages all students to think about the most obscure goals, "to avoid getting stuck." As a faculty representative on College Council between 1969 and 1972, he had to put this philosophy into practice, becoming a part of the resolution of many issues faced by the College as it moved through its own transitions. Universal in all this change was a factor that Mr. Grady has found most rewarding: "the number and variety of student accomplishments. These are not locked in place or time. They say that something right happens here, but they also remind you that some things could be better."

In his own life, using the language in which he is most conversant, Mr. Grady finds himself "located on the frontier of personal and professional production, at a point which makes possible the continuance of growth and development." For the students on whom the impact of his teaching may be the initiation of a broadening of their horizons, this can only mean an enhancement of the opportunity to have activated what Mr. Grady believes is "inherently or naturally there, in the full utilization of talents and resources." To this end, if given the ability to bestow upon each incoming freshman one heartfelt conviction, Mr. Grady would have each student believe "that she or he is about to enter a period of exploration and critical examination of what it means to be, a period in which to live as much of the total human experience as one possibly can."

With the end of each day, the City of Philadelphia looks toward tomorrow for someone to reveal the secret of its potential. As that same sun falls golden on the walls of La Salle College, hearts beat secure in the knowledge that this institution's potential is gradually becoming less of a secret and more of a reality through the efforts of its herald, John Grady.

"There is nothing so practical as a good theory"

One example of a good theory which has been put into practice is the Small Business Development Center of La Salle. Started eight years ago as the Small Business Institute, the Center provides management assistance to small businesses in Philadelphia.

Two years ago, the concept of the Small Business Development Center (SBDC) arose. La Salle's clients come from the GLOW region: Germantown, Logan, Olney, and West Mount Airy. In fact, the Center is currently working with the Urban Ministry, the Cheltenham Avenue Businessmen's Association, and the Urban Affairs Center at La Salle to develop the Cheltenham Avenue area.

The SBDC is directed by Dr. Bernard B. Goldner, Professor of Management and owner-manager of several small businesses. Dr. Goldner became involved since he was the person at La Salle with the most practical experience in dealing with small businesses. In addition, he has been teaching a course entitled "Small Business Consulting" for many years. As Dr. Goldner stated, "I can blend the theoretical and the practical."

Dr. Goldner, a graduate of Olney High School who earned his B.S., M.A., and Ph.D. degrees from the University of Pennsylvania, has written a number of books and articles on creative thinking in business, has appeared on television and radio programs, and has been a consultant to top management and government for many years.

The SBDC is designed to help in all phases of small business, from pre-venture (people who want to go into business for themselves) to established companies that need improvement. The Center's management assistance includes identifying problems, developing corrective measures, creating alternative solutions, implementing these solutions, and following up through questionnaires and visits. Areas of aid are accounting, record keeping, financial analysis, marketing programs, long-range planning, and information systems, including the use of microcomputers. "Overall, our job is to help businesses improve, particularly small businesses."

Some of the assistance at the Center comes from La Salle's faculty and students, both graduate and undergraduate. They also get aid from outside, most notably from members of the Service Corps of Retired Executives, members of the Active Corps of Executives, and Community Accountants.

There is no charge to the client for the Center's services. They are partially funded by the federal government (50%) and by private firms and foundations (10%), and "matching funds" are provided by La Salle (40%). The Centers are funded on a yearly basis, and Dr. Goldner works with Dr. Fred Foley in making proposals and requesting grants.

Examples of businesses aided by the Center include a diver with an underwater video camera, a typist who wanted to get into the word-processing business, a Chestnut Hill restaurant, a dog grooming business, and a La Salle graduate in the catering business. In this year alone, the Center has aided approximately 150 clients.

La Salle's SBDC and the other Centers in Philadelphia recently began working together to reach out to advanced technology businesses. The Ben Franklin Partnership, involving the Small Business Administration and the State of Pennsylvania, is using the Centers to collect data for the greater Philadelphia area. The result will be a comprehensive inventory of technology-based businesses in Pennsylvania and available resources for these companies. La Salle's SBDC has a new budget for this purpose and Dr. Radharao Chaganti of the Management Department is the training director of the program. According to Dr. Goldner, "We are in the forefront of exploring advanced technology development."

The Center uses computer programs to control cases, uses microcomputers to help clients, and runs mini-seminars on how to get into the word-processing business. "Part of the effectiveness of the control and follow-up of our whole program will be dependent upon our continuing to use La Salle's computer and possibly getting more of its capacity for the SBDC."

Dr. Goldner feels the Center's future includes expansion: "As business conditions get better, we see more and more people wanting to open new businesses, especially those who have been working for other companies." Also, there are many new ventures in the "high-tech" fields and some companies who need improvement. All in all, the Center should have a thriving future.

Exploring the Resources of Women's Lives

Dr. Caryn McTighe Musil, Associate Professor of English, is someone who fills a need when she sees it. Sensing the need for a program dedicated to women's studies, Musil helped to successfully engineer the founding of such a program at La Salle along with Arleen Dallery, Judith Newton, and Barbara Levy Simon. Currently, these four women serve as the Women's Studies Concentration coordinators.

Musil describes the program as "A minor that allows students to explore the limitations and resources of women's lives and to examine gender as a category of cultural and historical analysis." The Concentration offers courses in such disciplines as history, sociology, English and special topics.

Yet, the Concentration is more than just courses. For example, a group exercise class, which was free to all, was recently sponsored by the Women's Studies Concentration (WSC). Musil, Newton and Barbara Thorp, a WSC student, each led class on one of the three days it was offered. The Concentration also tried to raise special funds to award a prize for the best student essay on a women's studies topic and to provide student scholarships to women's studies conferences. In addition, the WSC helps to keep the campus abreast of those issues of interest to women, and to inform others interested in women's studies of La Salle's activities.

To teach is to sensitize. To words. To

The words of Elie Wiesel cast a special light on the intricate and meaningful work of the teacher. La Salle is a college distinguished by the excellence of its teachers. They are a group of diverse individuals whose influence reaches beyond the lecture stand and the blackboard. Encouraging critical analysis and ethical action, they raise questions in students' minds as well as answer them. They are themselves craftsmen of words and champions of ideas, expressing their concern for humanity in the selfless time and energy they spend educating. The individuals on these pages are illustrative of the many dedicated faculty, administrators, and staff who contribute so greatly to the education of the La Salle student. As instructors, advisors, colleagues and friends, they enrich the entire college with the breadth of their experience and the strength of their character.

From Shakespeare to Silverman

If you're not an English or Communication Arts major, chances are you've never had a course taught by Dr. Richard Goedkoop. That's a shame, because the tall, thin, articulate teacher with the funny Dutch name (pronounced Good-Coupe) offers a fine blend of field experience and theoretical understanding to the La Salle student. Goedkoop embodies a comprehensive knowledge of the wide spectrum of communications, from theory and law to the intricacies of La Salle's television studio.

Presently residing in Lancaster County, Goedkoop has been a nomad of sorts. A native New Yorker — born on Long Island — he traveled north to the University of New Hampshire for his undergraduate degree. Upon graduation, Goedkoop spent a seven year hiatus in the business world. Michigan was his next stop on the academic trail where he attended Central Michigan University for his M.A. before obtaining a Ph.D. from Penn State.

Along the way, Goedkoop was exposed to a lot more than just the classroom. He has written, produced, directed, and anchored for radio and television in two states. His "hands on" experience and teaching ability have made him an invaluable asset to the English and Communication Arts Department. Says Communication Arts Coordinator Bro. Gerry Molyneaux, "Richard has such a broad understanding of the communications field, he can't help but be an instrumental member of the Department. I wish I had five more Richard Goed-

In just his fourth year on the faculty, Goedkoop has had a profound effect on the La Salle community. He is the founder and faculty moderator of Alpha Epsilon Rho (AERho), the national broadcasting society. AERho provides students with a valuable bridge from the classroom to the communications field. "AERho has done much that I'm proud of," explains Goedkoop, "we've presented outside speakers, established internships, and have helped with Paul Perillo's national, award-winning radio program Both Sides Now. I think it's very important for students who plan to go into the communications field to understand that competition is fierce. It's imperative that they get involved in more than just their studies, and the sooner the better." AERho president Tricia McCunney gives Goedkoop a lot of credit, "If it wasn't for Richard, I can easily say that La Salle wouldn't have AERho." In addition to his AERho responsibilities and reaching a full load of classes, Goedkoop is also coordinator of La Salle's television studio.

It would be incorrect to assume that problems. To ideas. To anguish and humanity.

Goedkoop is only valuable on the practical side of the communications universe. In fact, his undergraduate degree is in English Literature and he modestly admits, "Though we have many more qualified people here at La Salle, I could probably teach a course in literature if I had to." His versatility does not end there, though. He is capable of teaching mass communication history and law, broadcast management, and the social and political effects of mass communication. Without doubt, Goedkoop is one of the most well-rounded teachers on the La Salle faculty.

The most obvious question to ask Richard Goedkoop after reading his resume is why he didn't stay in the business. He has all the skills necessary to work in either television or radio, so why didn't he? "I don't like the business side of broadcasting. There's a cosmetic or phony aspect to radio and television that just isn't for me. Also, there's too much moving from market to market, city to city. Not only that, but I enjoy teaching. I really like working with students and their ideas. The benefits of teaching far outweigh those of the business." For Richard Goedkoop the choice was simple, and La Salle has definitely benefited from his making it.

From Newton to Apples

A computer keyboard occupies the area traditionally reserved for a desk blotter. Shelves of computer software proliferate on walls where we had expected to find formula-laden blackboards. This is the office of Dr. Stephen Longo, physics professor and La Salle's newly appointed Academic Computing Coordinator.

A La Salle alumnus, Dr. Longo received a master's degree from Lehigh University and earned his Ph.D. in theoretical physics at the University of Notre Dame. Dr. Longo has taught physics at La Salle since 1971. High energy classroom presentations are his trademark. And his expertise ordinators will target other instructors in their departments for instruction and will help them develop a specialized approach toward computer use in their field. With the Academic Computing Coordinator implementing the ideas of the Task Force, up to twenty teachers per semester will become computer literate. Consequently, La Salle will be an attractive choice to high school students who are accustomed to the use of state-of-the-art computers in their education.

Always one to tackle a tough problem, Stephen Longo approaches his new

is reflected in his recently published Introduction to Decsystem — 20 Assembly Programming.

Dr. Longo's long-time interest in computers made him a natural to become La Salle's first Academic Computer Coordinator. The College is seeking to integrate the use of computers into various academic disciplines around the campus. The Academic Computing Task Force, headed by Dr. Henry Barr, will initially instruct one teacher in each department in the educational use of computers who will then become that department's "local coordinator." In turn, these local coor-position with the enthusiastic zest that he brings to the physics classroom. "My work is my leisure time," Dr. Longo states with reserved self-satisfaction over many a job well done. Indeed, his dedication to hard work is not confined within the walls of the Holroyd Science Center. Defining the traditional physicist as "somewhat of a tinkerer," Dr. Longo typescasts himself well. While at home with his wife and two children, he enjoys building and construction jobs about the house. And just as if the roles of administrator, teacher, husband, father, and do-it-yourself-er do not seem to amply consume the 24 hours in each day, Dr. Longo still finds time to head the Philadelphia Area Computer Society (PACS).

Founded in 1976, PACS's explosive rise in membership parallels the mushrooming of technological advances within the computer industry. The 1100 member group of computer users increased its size twofold within the last two years. With Dr. Longo as president, the society holds monthly meetings which bring computer enthusiasts together in a forum in which they can discuss topics of mutual interest and learn about the newest advances in computer technology.

Clearly, Stephen Longo is a man who cringes at the thought of sitting idly by while others are working. It is not surprising to find that Dr. Longo enjoys physics and computers because of the challenges they pose. Best put by Dr. Longo himself, "My greatest enjoyment is in the cracking of the walnut, whether or not I eat what's inside."

Superheating the Aqueous Vapor

(Lifting the Mists)

When the mystery is separated from "chemystery," one is left with simply chem, and some of its derivatives, namely Chem 111-112, Chem 306, Chem 402, and the rare Chem 406. While not responsible for the actual synthesis of the above, Dr. Shalhoub takes great pains — no, pleasure — in making sure every one of his students realizes what occurs in the process. In other words, Dr. Shalhoub works very hard in the attempt to dispel the cloud of confusion that seems to surround chemistry. However, while he is busy clearing the fog, a few of the cobwebs that accumulate in the mind are also swept out. Rare is the day he will say that chemistry is easy. Rarer still, he believes, is the person who cannot understand chemistry. After having taken a few of his rests you may be tempted to disagree.

Dr. Shalhoub first set foot in Philadelphia at the height of the bicentennial celebration. He came here with a Ph.D. from Michigan State to do post-doctoral work at the University of Pennsylvania. Within two years he landed a job at La Salle. One might have expected this, for La Salle is akin to Dr. Shalhoub's own alma mater, Manhattan College. (Manhattan is also run by the Christian Brothers.) Phorpherically enough, as a nipper little George loved to play with his chemistry set. Now he plays, as a grown man, with a better one. The important thing is that he retains the fascination. In college he found that the other sciences did not have the same "magic." As a matter of fact, he and his chem-major buddies went to great lengths to cur a rather unpopular physics class. After being deeply impressed by another teacher of unusual excellence, Dr. Shalhoub decided that this was the road to follow.

At this time Dr. Shalhoub has traveled quire a distance. What separates him from most is his concern, not only for the integrity of his teaching, but more imporantly, for the object of his teaching, the student. One can learn a lot in the hallways of Holroyd after class because Dr. Shalhoub has managed to raise a fair number of questions in about the same number of heads. This is precisely what he likes about La Salle. At one time, Dr. Shalhoub taught classes of 120 at Widener University, but for him, this was not teaching, it was merely lecturing. "That was too impersonal, a computer or a video screen could be just as effective." Dr. Shalhoub likes to be asked questions to get a sense of the class. Here at La Salle you "can see in their eyes and say 'WOW, they got it,' or 'Hell, I blew them away.'" There is more to his concern than personal satisfaction, though. Dr. Shalhoub spends most of his free time on campus on the third floor of Holroyd so that he is available in case any one needs a hand, be it with chemistry problems, labs, computer questions, or even with applying to graduate or medical schools.

In addition to spending most of his time working with students, he also works for them. Working on the Curriculum Committee, he is one of the many that make sure the program fits the student, so that, come graduation, the student will fit the program. He is also on the Christian Brothers' Scholarship Review Board and the Fellowship Committee. These activities interest Dr. Shalhoub because he has the opportunity to see just what the students, especially non-science majors, are up to. Nonscholastically, you can usually find Dr. Shalhoub relaxing (?) on the suspended track in Hayman Hall during the lunch hour. At home you might find him playing the saxophone (he calls it wailing; his wife might say the same with a slightly different meaning), listening to his jazz albums or occasionally strolling the local golf course with his brother-in-law, Dr. Bart.

The bottom line: in George Shalhoub

we have a man who is dedicated to more than just education, he is dedicated to those he is educating.

Robert Levis

Living Up to Her Potential and Beyond

The potential of each individual at La Salle extends further than the student body; it reaches into the shadows of the faculty and staff at the college. Dr. Barbara Levy Simon is one faculty member casting aside the shadows and living up to her potential. Barb Simon graduated from Goucher College in Maryland in 1972 and received her master's degree and Ph.D. from the Graduate School of Social Work and Social Research at Bryn Mawr College. Although she has been teaching at La Salle for only four years, she has been able to meet a wide variety of challenges. In addition to teaching three courses a semester, she is responsible for the field placements of a number of students. This involves finding and monitoring quality field positions for junior and senior students, making necessary adjustments in the placements, and keeping the quality of the positions high as the demand for them goes up.

Teaching is one important aspect of Barb Simon's life, but contributing to other parts of the whole person are her role in administration, numerous research and writing projects, and active involvement in the community. As an administrator, she is Director of Field Work and a member of the Women's Studies Steering Committee at La Salle. She hopes to more fully develop both of these in the future. Furthermore, she is Director of the Consultation and Education Unit and Director of Planning for the Board of Directors of the Community Organization for Mental Health and Retardation. She has also been involved in 'Women Organized Against Rape, the Building Blocks' Board of Directors, and the Philadelphia Reproductive Rights Organization Steering Committee. Over the past four years she has written five articles and reviews, three of which were written in 1983. In the same four year period, she has written a dozen professional papers and has also conducted extensive post-doctoral studies in the area of research of never-married women, on which she hopes to publish a book in two years.

Young, vigorous and involved, Barb Simon is just coming on the scene at La Salle and is certainly giving it her all. Her achievements in such a short period of time demonstrate her value to La Salle in the future. Her schedule is full and definitely challenging, but Barb Simon is living up to her potential. This potential, as Barb Simon puts it herself, is "writing, researching and teaching to the best of my ability."

Rob DiGregorio

A Philosopher for His Time

"The Department of Philosophy will have its human justification, if it consists of men able to raise important questions well in the company of people for whom such questions will come to have importance."

This quote from a paper entitled "Philosophy as Madness, Philosophy as Discipline" by Dr. Michael Kerlin is a good introduction to his role on our campus. In any institution of higher education, students need to think about the important questions, and faculty need to raise these questions with them. This is the job which Mike Kerlin took on eighteen years ago at La Salle and has managed to do so well.

A native Philadelphian, Dr. Kerlin attended West Catholic High School. After obtaining his degree in English Education here at La Salle, he went on to teach at a high school in Arlington, Virginia. This experience holds fond memories for him because he was able to interact with the students through their extracurricular activities. He made the transition from high school to college instructor with two doctoral degrees: one in philosophy from the Gregorian University in Rome and one in religion from Temple University. Coming to La Salle in 1965, he has spent twelve of his eighteen years as chairman of the Philosophy Department.

In the paper previously mentioned, Dr. Kerlin also wrote: "It is that asking of the fundamental questions within any parricular area of human concerns which I take to be the heart of philosophy." Although he is a strict lover of philosophy and its history, he has moved toward business and economic questions in his courses and personal studies. From his students he expects the same thought provoking, logical discussions and willingness to learn as he demands of the faculty in his department. He has organized a lecture series within the philosophy department in which he stresses faculty involvement, including faculty from other disciplines. He has given lectures in the Concert and Lecture Series and tries to attend as many programs as possible to aid in his own intellectual growth.

In his personal beliefs he tries to "take sides by defending the middle," defining himself as a "see-er of complexity" because he sees all the sides of a question. Although this makes it difficult to defend a position, he does vote and involve himself in current issues. In the 1960's, which he describes as a period of turmoil, even at La Salle, he supported one of his students in a conscientious objection. More recently, he has signed petitions and attended peace demonstrations against nuclear weapons.

Thus, the truly distinguishing characteristic about Mike Kerlin is that he is a philosopher, not just a professor of philosophy. His diverse interests outside of the classroom only confirm this. He enjoys running and swimming to maintain his good health and also finds an outlet in cooking. As a student in his class, I remember several stories about the great pickles which he made. For his cultural enjoyment he is taking viola lessons and Russian lessons. He hopes eventually to learn both Chinese and Russian as he would like to do more traveling. He is also taking some courses in accounting — "just to take courses" — although he is already well-read in several disciplines.

Dr. Kerlin feels that La Salle is like his family and that everything he does is tied into his teaching. He hopes that both he and La Salle stay healthy, but as a true philosopher: "I would like for us all to sit around like Socrates and his disciples and cheerfully puzzle out the big questions together."

Basic Ingredients for Success

"I try to perform my job like IBM runs their corporation." That is the major philosophy of Personnel and Labor Relations professor Michael Korzeniowski. It would seem that Dr. Korzeniowski is well placed as a Human Resource Management professor because he has such definitive ideas on the keys of success in the workplace.

According to Dr. "K," the keys to success (which are based on IBM's basic beliefs) are threefold. The first major success criterion is "respect for the individual," which translates into always treating students fairly and listening to what they have to say. The second criterion, "giving the truly best service to students," means always being available to students to help them plan both their curriculum and careers. The final guidepost for success, "perform every task in a superior manner," means being 125% prepared for class with the latest information. In a nutshell, these basic beliefs foster professionalism, perfectionism, and optimism in Dr. Korzeniowski. With respect to the latter characteristic, Dr. Korzeniowski is a disciple of Chuck Tanner (manager of the Pittsburgh Pirates) who is well-known for his eternal optimism in the worst of situations.

A trademark of Dr. Korzeniowski's seven years at La Salle has been his involvement with students outside of the classroom. Specifically, he is the advisor of the Society for the Advancement of Management (SAM) and the American Society for Personnel Administration (ASPA), the moderator of Tau Kappa Epsilon fraternity, and a member of the Business Honor Society Advisory Board.

Outside La Salle, Dr. Korzeniowski serves as a management consultant and seminar leader in the areas of personnel practices and human resource development. Also, he is currently writing a book on management decision making.

Dr. "K" holds a Ph.D. in applied psychology because he thinks it is an "action-oriented" discipline. However, he feels that the academic world has not changed him much from the person who grew up in Wildwood Crest, NJ. Along these lines, Dr. Korzeniowski seems well suited for La Salle College because he can easily relate to the student who has worked his way through college.

Finally, Dr. Korzeniowski readily admits to being a workaholic, which is no surprise considering his high achievement-oriented nature. But that is the kind of dedication that La Salle College needs.

solving conflicts between the administration and individual faculty members, but matters like that make up only a small part of the Senate's work.

The President of the Senate and two senators elected by the membership of the Senate sit on College Council, the major administrative advisory body to the President of La Salle. The Senate is responsible for appointing faculty members to the various College committees, as well as developing and reviewing policies that affect all areas of College life. Through discussion, debate, and mounds of paperwork, the Senate tries to keep itself involved in all aspects of College life that can affect the quality of interaction between students and professors. The Faculty Senate's "power" rests solely in its ability to influence; it is not a legislative body. Yet, as the voice of one of the two indispensable elements in education, the Faculty Senate enjoys a central position in the operation of La Salle College.

Sparkling an Interest

In addition to academics, education includes the social, emotional, and psychological development of the student. College aids in these types of growth not only through theories learned in Philosophy class, but also in practice through interaction with others.

With nearly one hundred registered groups, clubs, and organizations on campus, La Salle students are offered a spectrum of activities to spark their interest and explode into a source of growth and maturity. The range of opportunities span from the social and service functions of sororities and fraternities to those activities tailored to specific needs and wants, such as the Marketing Association and Mobilization for Survival. Together they promote student initiative, encouraging students to develop their unique talents while reaching them to work with others.

In the following pages you will experience the people and groups who make La Salle the warm, friendly, and close college it is.

A Grand Experiment

The 1983-84 season will prove to be an important one in the history of Explorer athletics. It marks the college's first year in the Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference (MAAC), a relatively recent conference, that, in the words of Athletic Director Bill Bradshaw, "joins Northeastern institutions with similar commitments to athletics." The MAAC, which was originally founded in 1980, included Army, Fairfield, Fordham, Iona, Manhattan and St. Peter's. This year, in addition to La Salle, the conference added Holy Cross College. The 1983-84 LSC sports season is an important one because it is a resting ground not only for the Explorers within the new conference, but also for the rationale behind the decision to switch conferences.

From the moment the announcement was made that La Salle would be exiting the cozy confines of the East Coast Conference, where it had been a founding member for nine years, a controversy seemed to erupt in Hayman Hall. Coaches whose teams

A Seesaw Season

Perhaps the best way to describe the performance of the 1983 Field Hockey Team is in terms of a seesaw. The sometimes-brilliant, sometimes-inconsistent play of the Explorer women netted them an 8-8-2 final record. It was a gutsy season for the sticksters, however, who had to face a few adversities. Among them was a new coach in the form of Juli Grandell, who took the reins of the team from Marge Mannion. Grandell is the third coach the team has had in the four years since its national championship victory. Schedule continuity was also a problem in 1983. Since the MAAC does not compete in field hockey, LSC was conference-less. The letdown of losing familiar ECC foes, coupled with the inclusion of a few national powerhouses such as Temple, Lehigh, Rutgers, Ursinus, and Delaware all took their toll on the women. As if this wasn't enough, the team was devastated by graduation. Seven of the best competitors in the sport's history here at La Salle said goodbye, and were replaced by no incoming recruits. When looking at some of the obstacles the women had to face during the season, the final record of the field hockey team is not as mediocre as it looks on paper.

The seesawing season of the women began with a crushing defeat at the hands of its old nemesis Delaware. The women seemed ill-prepared to take the field against such a formidable opponent. This was not a lasting problem, though, as

"By playing field hockey at La Salle I was able to acquire a unique form of mental and physical discipline which not only helped me on the playing field but carried over into the classroom. Athletics has aided me in setting my goals and more importantly, in achieving them."

Tesa Donnelly

the sticksters began a three game winning streak, their longest of the season, in their very next game with a 4-1 defeat over Textile. The winning streak was capped with a dazzling 2-1 overtime decision against Washington, DC's American University. Momentum seemed to be building among the women, but two back-to-back losses dropped the team to 3-3 and doused any kindling fire of optimism. The team couldn't string victories together, as they continued their impression of a seesaw the rest of the way.

There were many bright spots to the season. The scoring output of underclassmen Rhunette Smith (junior) and Carol McLaughlin (sophomore) blended smoothly with the experienced rallying talents of senior captain Tesa Donnelly. Stringy was the middle name of an impressive defense headed by senior Joanie Ferrari and sophomore Cindy McBreary, who played the entire season with a cast on her arm due to a pre-season collision with a stick against Boston College. Such self-sacrifice characterizes the effort of the 1983 team.

The future is promising for the continued success of Explorer Field Hockey. The women should settle into their new schedule with time. Coaching permanence will also help in establishing a winning tradition.

Perhaps more importantly, the team will only lose two players to graduation. These all seem to add up to a great year in 1984.

Rhunette Smith leads the La Salle attack.

Teresa Donohue battles an opponent in a 4-1 victory over Textile.

Pursuing the action, Linda Borratt leaves the crowd a blur.

Carol McLaughlin exhibits fine form as she brings the ball in.

Booters' Fighting Spirit

Dmyro Kulchycky is determined not to be out-musled by the Textile defender.

Goalreder Mike Kogur's intense concentration is evident in his cat-like stance.

Chris Mullen uses some fancy footwork to get past the opposition.

Senior Rob Whitman gets in a shot on the Textile player.

Helps Capture Conference Title

The La Salle Explorer Soccer Team, coming off of their finest record, had high expectations for the 1983 season. Having won the East Coast Conference last year, the Explorers challenged new faces, new teams, in a new league — the Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference.

In their first MAAC performance the boaters out-classed Fairfield 4-0, extending the longest Division 1 winning streak to twelve games. Unfortunately for the Explorers, the streak skidded to a stop in a physical match with Penn, leaving freshman Bobby Wilkinson down and out for the season. Despite some major injuries the team remained strong — strong enough to hold nationally ranked Textile scoreless in 110 minutes of play. The scoreless tie is a credit to the team's outstanding defense, led by potential All-American goaltender Mike Kogut.

In the Textile game, Kogut showed everyone why he's one of the country's finest goalies. He made 25 saves, four coming in a span of five seconds. Kogut knows that a goalie can only be as good as the players in front of him, and in his own boisterous way, he leads the ten players in front of him to an all out attack. With senior backs like Greg Cowhey and Dmytro Kulchycky who, as the MAAC teams have found out, always give 110%, the Explorer defense is rough to beat. But to win, as the Explorers well know, you also have to score goals.

After winning a revenge march against Lehigh, the La Salle boaters took a turn for the worse. They fell to a dominant American squad, trying to march individual skills instead of playing their own aggressive game.

They then suffered two disappointing losses in overtime. In the first against Drexel, they performed poorly, lacking aggressiveness again. Even with the offensive push of Jim Hooven and Artie Derrra, La Salle couldn't score in the second, losing to St. Peter's for their only conference loss of the season.

"While playing soccer I've learned how to win. I've learned how to lose, I've learned how to deal with people, and most importantly I've learned that the only way you are going to achieve in life is through hard work and dedication. The only thing you're going to get out of a situation is what you put into it."

Michael Kogut

However, this year's team was able to pick themselves up after these disappointments. Such was the case when the team went up to New York City's Bronx to play Fordham. In this alien territory, Artie Derrra's scrappy, hard-hitting competitiveness became noticed as he scored, in the words of Coach Wilkinson, "our biggest goal of the year." However, the Explorers' troubles weren't over. Due to a van incident on the victory ride home, half the team, including both goalies, was suspended by the dean for two games.

Again it was Artie who was called on to fill Kogut's position. In the first game against St. Joe's the back-up team played respectably, but fell short to the Hawks. However, in the second march against Iona, the team managed to score, giving Artie the shut-out.

In keeping with tradition, this year's team played out their remaining conference games with that fighting spirit that never says die. The team fought their way past Manhattan and made it home from New York this time without incident. Then in came the soldiers of Army who outweighed and outnumbered the La Salle side, but the Explorers outshout them and made them retreat home with a 1-0 loss. Finally, the MAAC Championship came down to a crusade in Boston with Holy Cross. Down at the half by a goal, La Salle prepared for that classic come-from-behind finish and won the game and Conference.

Players who will be missing next year are Co-captains Jim Hooven and Mike Kogut, scoring machines Chris Mullen and Art Derrra, defensive powers Greg Cowhey, Dymtro Kulchycky and Mark Sandberg, and utility players Maurice Cranney, Rob Whitman and Larry Fields.

Battling Against All Odds

For the third consecutive year, the La Salle Women's Tennis Team posted a winning season. Under the direction of coach Jeff Marmon and captain Mary Ellen Lyons, the lady Explorers closed out their 1983 season with an impressive 10-4 record. They were top contenders in the PAIAW, ECC and MAAC tournaments.

The women's season was highlighted by an excellent performance in the PAIAW Championships with Drexel, Ursinus, St. Joseph's, Kutztown and Rider. One of the bright spots of the season was attained by senior Mary Ellen Lyons. Lyons swept through all of her matches, won the championship, and paved the way for a third place team finish. Junior Kathy Pedicone suffered only one loss in the championships.

Mary Ellen Lyons capped off a brilliant collegiate career at La Salle, having been the #1 player through her four years. She won the PAIAW Championships, earned seedings and numerous points in ECC and MAAC tournaments, and qualified for the women's Eastern Regional Championships. Lyons was not the only senior on this team. Alice Seiberlich played first doubles and enjoyed great success in her winning record along with the only other senior, Marlene King. Sophomore Andi Horvath also had a winning season, taking the third place singles position.

Two freshmen, Tess Casals and Kerri McGinley, also made great contributions to the team this season. Casals teamed up with senior Alice Seiberlich, and second doubles was headed by McGinley and sophomore Jackie Dano.

The women were very successful in their entry into the Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference. Top rivals included Fordham, Manhattan, Iona, Holy Cross, Army, Fairfield, NYU, St. Peter's, Drexel, and Big Five favorites Villanova and St. Joe's.

Coch Marmon was pleased with the team's performance, especially since "the women had a more rigorous schedule." Mary Ellen Lyons sees the season as gratifying not only because of numerous victories, but in the friendships and character that were built through the season.

La Salle Captures MAAC Volleyball Title

Any kind of personal involvement in athletics is a rewarding experience. Athletes feel a sense of victory by surpassing all set goals, and the power of their minds continues to push them onward even when it seems that their legs have already given out. Yes, it's a gratifying experience.

No experience has been more rewarding than the Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference title captured by the Explorer volleyball team this season. These ladies have exemplified in their 1983 season what a coach's dream is all about. Surely theirs is a Cinderella story.

What team other than the Explorers could have the odds stacked so high against them yet still capture their first MAAC Championship? What odds? Well, early in the season, the lady Explorers were forced to forfeit several games because they didn't have enough players. Considering that only six are required on the court to play, the Explorers had some serious maneuvers to make. The team had one week to go out and recruit players to prevent the program from folding. Coach Maureen O'Callaghan became the instrumental force, pushing the girls to believe in themselves. They handled the ball well, and, interestingly enough, they did it with only ten players, eight of whom were freshmen. Five of these girls had never even played volleyball before.

So, the volleyball team literally rebuilt from scratch, not only to reach the girls how to play, but also to reach them the strategy of the game. A coach's dream, these underdogs were not willing to give Franchetti, along with Margaret McCairns, became the stronghold for the team, taking on leadership positions to pull the Explorers together when at times it seemed as if they would never get off the ground.

"I felt the team was more enthusiastic this year. Their attitude was great, but at times, it was frustrating because we had to reach them how to play and how to understand the strategy behind the game," said Franchetti.

But they took on the challenge and met it with a stiff upper lip. It was certainly a task, one that reaches players the value of teamwork and in many ways prepares them for the future.

The lady Explorers turned the season in. Coming off a 5 and 16 season and faced with their MAAC tournament at home, the Explorers captured the title by coming from behind to win it in nine straight games.

Captain Denise Franchetti felt that Coach Maureen O'Callaghan was "the main push to convince everyone on the team that she was needed and was not there just to fill in the empty positions. She really developed and disciplined the freshmen and she wasn't easy on them."

around and anticipate an even better season next year with an MAAC Championship already under their belts. But they did it the hard way this year, and what better way to feel the thrill of victory than by tasting the possibility of defeat. Congratulations to the lady Explorers on their well-earned championship.

Barbara Pomponio

"I think athletics helps you get involved with other people. You have to discipline yourself and set your own goals. Generally, in a working situation, you have to get along with your co-workers. So you learn a lot about their character and how to overlook some of their actions. Whether it be contact with teammates or co-workers, you have to learn to tolerate and accept their emotions and that's important."

Developing a Strong Running Base

Hurt by the timing of the Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference Championship meet, which, scheduled for late October, fell within a period during which development was still taking place, and the inability to secure a spot for competition in two key meets within the season, the Men's Cross-Country Team never had the chance to put together that "big race". What the team was able to accomplish, however, through the effort of the team's coach, Mr. James Gavaghan, was the development of a strong, competitive, and healthy running base. It was off of this base that the members of the team hoped to launch themselves into the middle and long distance events of the upcoming Indoor and Outdoor Track seasons.

For the senior members of the team, Brent Barnhill, Marc Librizzi, Dave Boligitz, and Martin Loscalzo, the season marked the culmination of membership within the first full four-year program coached by Mr. Gavaghan. For each of these men, cross-country running added an element of physical competition and achievement to the academic and social elements of their college experience.

Michael Burke, coach of the women's cross-country team.

What do the Financial Aid Office and the Athletic Department have in common? To anyone familiar with La Salle's running teams the answer is obvious; but, for the rest of us, it is not so readily apparent. Michael Burke, the friendly, outgoing and helpful person that many students flock to each semester for financial aid advice, is also the women's cross country and track coach here at LSC. Taking the helm of a demoralized, rag-tag unit a few short years ago, Burke has turned the women's cross country and track teams into a proud and highly competitive force on the track circuit. This year's second-place finish by the cross country team in the Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference (MAAC) is proof of Burke's abilities.

The rapid metamorphosis that has made the women's cross country team into one of the better athletic programs at La Salle has not been the result of magic as in a children's novel; but, rather hard work and competent leadership. Coach Burke has influenced both of these areas. A collegiate runner himself and a running aficionado, Burke is well aware of the extreme commitment necessary to be a successful runner.

This year the La Salle Golf Team underwent many changes. Due to the exodus of five members because of graduation, the structure of the squad has become weak and lacking in experience. The team has undergone almost total metamorphosis. Enormous pressure has been placed on the shoulders of returning upperclassmen Dave Beardsley, Carlos Bermudez, Pat Grundy, and Eric Mras. It will be the responsibility of these men not only to perform well on the course, but also to set an example for a new crop of underclassmen. Among the incoming golfers are: Jim Jenkins, Joe Hughes, Jeff Campbell, and John Doyle.

Characteristic of the many changes taking place in Explorer Golf this season was the surprising retirement of longtime Head Coach J.T. Connors in mid-November. Connors' contributions to LSC

This year's wrestling team marked the start of many new things. The most important thing started this year was the spark of excitement as the team started to produce. A new coach, Tom Murr, one of the youngest mentors in college grappling history, managed more wins in a single season than the program had gathered since its inception.

The addition of freshmen Dan "Egan" McFadden, Dan "the Man" Anninious, Bill "Bruiser" Incollingo, Mike "the Animal" Sroughton, and Chris "the Walrus" Thomas gave the mat men the depth they needed to put away teams such as Swarthmore, Widener, Elizabethtown, Loyola, Lynchburg, and Furman.

Co-skippers Andy "Spor the Wonder Dog" La Fond and Bob "Hare Me" Schumann, along with Rob "Bulter" Liptak, Greg "the Chef" Schaub, and George "Rodney" Giovannozio rounded out the much improved team.

New Conference — Same Old (Winning) Story

An Explorer tries to execute a perfect dive.

For the past four years, the La Salle Men's Swimming Team has easily dominated the East Coast Conference. This year's team, however, is faced with a new challenge: that of winning the Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference title. According to Coach Lyons, the Explorers should meet the challenge with little difficulty.

Last year's team finished with a 9-2 overall record and the ECC crown. The nucleus of that team still remains, but there are also some fine additions. The team is built around returners Craig Cummings, Charlie Messa, and Paul Jarvis. Newcomers Steve Williams, Paul Hogan, Chris Loughlin, and Joe Weindorf will be looked upon not only for immediate help, but also to keep the winning tradition at La Salle.

As of February, the Explorers were 9-2 overall, and 1-0 in the conference. We wish the best for the team in their quest for the MAAC title and for their continued dominance over the competition.

Consistency From One Conference to Another

The women complete one grueling race only to compete in another.

Concentration and stamina are reflected in this swimmer's face.

A good start is an essential part of a successful race.

Last year's Lady Explorers, in their first year in the East Coast Conference, finished with a respectable fourth place and an 8-4 overall record. That fourth place finish could easily have been second as only several points separated three teams.

After their brief appearance in the ECC, the Lady Explorers have been thrust into the Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference. It took a while for the team to get adjusted, but they were able to regroup.

Behind Sue Fricker and freshman Val Selsler, Coach John Lyons is looking for the team to fare well in the new conference.

Lyons is optimistic about the progress of the team. "This year we will be competitive and in a few years I think we will be right around the top of the league."

Lyons also stated the importance of this year's recruiting. The squad will be losing six seniors and must have a good recruiting year to replace them. "Next year is a big year for us. We are looking at a few good swimmers."

Hopefully, Lyons will get the swimmers he needs to catapult the Lady Explorers to the top of the MAAC.

The 1983-84 basketball season was full of frustration for the Lady Explorers. The switch from the ECC to the much more competitive MAAC was a difficult transition for the team, especially with the memory of last year's impressive 17-11 record urging them on to even greater success. However, the team's bleak 13-18 record isn't really a fair indication of their season.

Defying pre-season predictions that La Salle would finish fifth in their new conference, Coach Kevin Gallagher led the women to a fourth place finish in the MAAC. In the La Salle College Invitational Tournament, held in Hayman Hall in December, the women placed a respectable fourth in an eight-team field that included nationally ranked Cheyney, Rutgers, Mississippi, and Minnesota. After posting losing records in January and February, the Lady Explorers ended the regular season with victories over Fordham and Iona. In the play-offs, they lost in the second round to St. Peter's, the eventual conference champion.

While loaded with talent, the team faced several problems that crippled them throughout the winter. Co-captains Kare Larkin and Julie Reidenauer were the only seniors who played; along with lone junior Gina Tobin they provided some experience, but the remaining nine spots on the team were filled by underclassmen. Injuries plagued player after player, never giving the squad enough time to gel and play as a team. As one player put it, "I couldn't say why, but there were intangibles missing. We had a lot of talent, a lot of potential, but we just couldn't get together."

One benefit of the season, though, is the bright future of the team. Sophomores Jill Crandley and Linda Hester will still be around, and the five freshmen will have had a year of experience playing college basketball.

Intramurals Allow Everyone to Compete

Football was a favorite sport for both men and women.

Basketball, football, volleyball, swimming, street hockey, softball, golf, and coed soccer — how do all of these sports connect with La Salle College? No, they're not joining basketball in Big Five competition. No, they can't be taken as electives either. Well, if you haven't guessed by now I'll have to tell you that they are the sports played in La Salle's intramural program.

Intramurals has a twofold objective. It lets people participate in a semiformal league, while at the same time providing them with free recreational play. In the past, only full-time day students played in intramural games, but now faculty members, staff members and full-time MBA students enjoy the fun and exercise as well.

During the school year, each sport is played in its appropriate season. Football and volleyball begin in the fall semester. Due to the popularity of basketball, its season runs from November to February. While the last half of basketball continues into the spring semester, street hockey commences. Although it is the second most popular intramural sport at La Salle, it is said to be the roughest. It seems that some of us still have fond memories of the "Broad Street Bullies" lingering in our minds.

Whether you choose to play a sport as physical as street hockey or one with less contact like softball or swimming, the idea of intramural sports all boils down to one thing: it's a people oriented, recreational activity. Tom Meier, Director of Intramurals, says, "Intramurals serves as an extracurricular activity which produces a sound mind and sound body. It's a chance for students and staff to put their work temporarily out of mind; therefore, relieving stress and anxiety."

If you have played intramural sports, you know what it's all about. If you're a freshman, sophomore or junior and have not participated in intramurals, then put it on next year's list of "Things to Do!"

As the 1983-84 Explorers took to the court, many questions remained unanswered. Had Steve Black recovered from an injury-plagued sophomore season? Could Albert "Truck" Butts regain the form that made him one of the best rebounders in the East? Would Ralph Lewis be capable of his solid, consistent play? Would a year of experience help Chip Greenberg run the offense? As the year progressed, it was apparent that Steve Black was back, "Truck" Butts had established himself as one of the best big men in college, Chip Greenberg had become an accomplished basketball technician, and Ralph Lewis proved to be one of the most consistent athletes to don the blue and gold.

The 1983-84 season saw many things. It was a year when Albert Butts and Ralph Lewis joined Steve Black in the 1,000 point club. It was a season in which La Salle competed in a new conference, the Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference (MAAC). And it was a time when Coach Dave "Lefty" Ervin guided his team to a fine 20-10 record and a trip to the National Invitational Tournament (NIT). With the addition of freshman forward Larry Koretz and his deadly shooting accuracy, La Salle could "run and gun" with the best of teams.

Compering in the MAAC, La Salle went up against the likes of Iona, St. Peter's, and Fordham twice, while battling their Big Five counterparts as well. Add in teams such as Louisville, Notre Dame, and Maryland, and the Explorer's record of 20-10 begins to shine.

Along with the NIT bid and a 20-win season, La Salle also won the regular season title in the MAAC by compiling an impressive 11-3 mark. The Explorers also shared the Big Five crown with nationally ranked Temple with a 3-1 record which included a pulsating double-overtime victory over the Owls in the season finale.

However, as the Explorers headed towards the MAAC Tournament, two of their starters were injured — Steve Black with a fractured hand and "Truck" Butts with tendonitis in his knee. Even though La Salle was able to ward off pesky Manhattan College in the opening round, they were unable to stop the Fordham Rams and Jerry Hobbie's desperation 30-foot jumper at the buzzer which eventually ended the tournament and regular season for the Explorers.

But taking into consideration that all five starters will be returning along with hot-shooting Richie Tarr and talented bench players Pere Tiano, Gary Jones, Dallas Philson, and Victor Moran, the future looks very bright for La Salle.

Better Than Ever

The La Salle College cheerleaders have come back for the 1983-84 season looking sharper than ever. For the second consecutive year the squad has had a full membership of men and women to lend their undying support to the Men's Basketball Team. This year, however, the cheering team's role as enthusiasts has stretched far beyond the confines of the court. As a group the team has become more exposed both on and off La Salle's campus in the form of social activities and fund raisers.

After a week's stay at the Universal Cheer Camp in August the team was able to add many new cheers, stunts, pyramids, and dances to their repertoire, which has already won many awards, including Best Pyramid, Zaniest Cheer, Spirit and Cheer awards. Team Hopes to be a Hit in New League

Sam Boone awaits the pitch.

The La Salle Explorer baseball team will start the 1984 season with high expectations. The Explorers, coached by Gene McDonald for the past twenty years, have the experience and quality it takes to be a solid contender in their new division, the Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference.

With the majority of the team returning this year, including all but one starter from last year's squad, the Explorers are indeed experienced. The team is also composed of strong pitching, solid hitting, and lightning speed.

The most important position on any team, especially if they intend to be successful, is pitching. La Salle's pitching coach, Burch McNally, works extremely hard with lefties Tony DeNofa, Pat Waninger, and Joe Wenzel, and with right-handers Doug Dotzman and Tom Kerrigan, for what hopes to be a promising season.

Bob McNally, the team's captain and catcher, calls the shots behind the plate. Bob has a strong, accurate arm and powerful hitting which makes him a quality player. He is a team leader who plays an important role for the Explorers.

pectations are seniors Bob Shannon and Bob Irwin.

After playing third base his sophomore and junior years, Bob Shannon is switching to shortstop. Shannon, regarded highly by major league scouts, has the most powerful bat in the Explorer's line-up. If he can produce offensively, La Salle has a chance at making the NCAA playoffs.

Bob Irwin, last year's All-EEC centerfielder who has a .350 collegiate career batting average, is the Explorer's "Secretary of Defense." Bob's quickness and mobility makes him one of the top center-fielders in college baseball.

With some hard work, dedication, and confidence, the 1984 Explorer baseball team should have a successful season.

The 1984 Men's Crew Team should represent the Blue and Gold in fine fashion this spring season. Crew, for those unfamiliar with the sport, involves rowing a boat. Unlike your favorite summer picnic event, however, it demands precision, strength, coordination, and speed.

The reasons the prognosis for the Explorer Crew Team, as they enter the spring season, is strong, are threefold. First, the squad is returning ten lettermen from last season, which adds up to valuable experience. Among those returning are Bog Sverela, a Dad Vail champion from last season with similar aspirations for this year, and skilled captains Tim Conrad and John McCann. Secondly, LSC performed well in the fall season which is a good indicator for the spring. Finally, the Explorers appear to be better than their Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference rivals. Explains first-year Assistant Coach Gary Rizzo, "La Salle has a much richer tradition in crew than the other MAAC teams. I would say this definitely gives us an advantage." All of these components mesh into a fine season for LSC.

Although the rowers are confident about their capabilities, they aren't in danger of becoming overconfident. Rizzo and Head Coach Dan Hingley wouldn't allow it. The two have masterminded a series of attainable goals to be met during the season by the team. The two coaches feel that if these goals are attained in succession they will be much like a stepladder to ultimate success for La Salle in the Dad Vail competition. Again, for those unfamiliar with the sport, the Dad Vail is the Superbowl or World Series of Crew. If the Explorers can stay on the ladder clearly mapped out by the coaching staff, a fine showing in the Dad Vails is all but assured.

Looking Toward Their Finest Performance

Before going in the water, a scull undergoes a meticulous inspection by rowers Ann Marie Murphy, Ellen Scher, and Josie Kelly.

In continuing to establish a tradition of women's rowing at La Salle, the women's coach, Dave McGuigan, has instilled renewed fervor in the squad. With the team's dedication and the coach's enthusiasm, the program is building a foundation for the coming years.

During the fall racing circuit, the women gave some promising performances. Hoping to come through with some even stronger results this spring are the varsity four and novice eight. The four varsity seniors Trish Breslin, Mandy Benner, Kate Knightly, and Ann Marie Murphy, having persevered under a variety of coaches over the years, are looking towards this spring as a chance to give perhaps their finest performance ever. The eight novice women have been tested through rigorous training and have the potential for future success. The program promises to remain a unique and valuable experience for those presently involved and those who have yet to take the challenge.

Amanda Benner

The preparation continues.

"Being a member of La Salle crew was a unique and beneficial experience because of the self-discipline and team dedication that is required for this year-round sport."

Ann Marie Murphy

On the river at last, rowers Ann Marie Murphy, Ellen Scher, Kate Knightly, and Josie Kelly and coxswain Kathleen McGauley try for a victory.

Finally, the scull is ready and the women descend the ramp.

Riders Bring Ribbons to La Salle

"While competing with the Equestrian Team, I have learned to look to others for advice, and to accept corrective criticism. Whether or not I take home an award, I always walk away gaining experience. Being a member of the Equestrian Team has shown me what team spirit is all about."

Chris Dougherty

This past fall La Salle's Equestrian Team, a member of the Intercollegiate Horse Show Association, competed in four shows sponsored by Rutgers University, Beaver College, Kurtztown State College, and Delaware Valley Community College. The team of ten fared well at all of these events, each time bringing home ribbons of which to be proud.

The Intercollegiate Horse Show Association is unique for two reasons. The first is that after graduating, students can still compete with their school as an alumni rider. Secondly, both male and female riders compete on an equal level. Our region is comprised of seventeen colleges plus the alumni, covering all of Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware, and Maryland.

A typical show day really begins weeks in advance with riding lessons from a professional instructor. Once trained, a rider is ready for the actual day of competition which begins at five o'clock in the morning. After a long ride to the show grounds, the team is given its schedule, horses are picked, "aids" for the individual horses are posted, and only waiting is left before the competition begins. If a rider is lucky, someone else on the team will have ridden the same horse that they are to show. This way, the rider will be more prepared to compensate for the horse's flaws. Lucky or not, every rider depends on all previous instructions and experience in order to make a respectable showing.

Any ribbons received at a show also account for points with first place meriting seven points, second receiving five points, and third through sixth place being awarded four, three, two and one point respectively. The points accumulate throughout the show season, and when riders receive 28 points in their specific class level they go on to the regional competition. A rider winning a first or second place at regionals then qualifies for the national competition. The national competition covers the top intercollegiate riders from over 140 colleges across the United States and Canada. This year our region is hosting nationals in Quentín, Pa., in the beginning of May. Everyone on La Salle's team is quite excited about this venture and hopes that those students who have already made regionals will qualify for nationals. They are sure that those who haven't qualified for regionals yet will put forth a strong spring season to qualify.

Did you know that La Salle has a rifle team? If you didn't, you're not alone. In fact, you could probably count the number of people who know about the Explorer Shooters on your fingers and toes. To say the least, they are not the most recognized sport on campus. No members steal the limelight from the acrobatics performed nightly by Stevie Black, nor is the rifle's locker room swamped with media-types at the end of a competition.

Though they do not receive an enormous amount of press, they do, in fact, exist. "What exactly is LSC Rifle?," you may be asking. "Rifle is a fully sanctioned, competitive, varsity sport that involves shooting a bored .22 caliber rifle at round targets," explains Head Coach Capt. Stone.

Yes, they do receive funds from the La Salle Athletic Department (a major fear in and of itself for non-basketball programs). And yes, they are sanctioned by both the NCAA and the Explorer's new conference, the MAAC.

1983-84 has been a rebuilding year for the riflers at La Salle. The team dropped out of competition for the season to recruit experienced talent. Capt. Stone more clearly describes the situation. "We really had no experienced shooters so instead of going ahead and competing — and probably losing — we dropped out to rebuild. I think it was a very smart idea, because we brought in eight freshmen shooters and have been able to train them much better than if we had to compete."

The team will be ready to compete next season, which begins in September. Stone is very optimistic of his team's chances to do well.

If they do, perhaps next year a lot more people will know that La Salle has a rifle team.

were not represented in the new conference, felt the move to the MAAC was made solely for the benefit of La Salle's basketball programs, to the detriment of the college's overall athletic ideals. Cynics critically saw the conference switch as another example of how the college bends over backwards to support its basketball program. The critics and cynics were too hasty in their indictment, however. To condemn the move to the Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference without giving it even one year to prove itself is ludicrous. The fact of the matter is, it is still too soon to determine whether La Salle athletics are better off because of the move to the new conference.

Bradshaw, who feels the move to the MAAC goes hand-in-hand with La Salle's desire to attain university status, was a major force behind the decision to switch conferences. "I think the advantages of the MAAC far outweigh the disadvantages," said Bradshaw. "The overall athletic picture is much healthier now than what it was in the ECC." In citing the advantages of the MAAC, Bradshaw presents a very good case. "The new conference offers an automatic bid to the NCAA basketball tournament for the winner of the conference. This means revenue to support all sports, not just basketball. The ECC could not offer such a bid. Also, the MAAC exposes us to the major Eastern media markets of New York and Boston, which the fairly regional ECC couldn't. This is a considerable advantage because recruiting in all sports, as well as general enrollment, are both increased through media attention. There is no doubt that our involvement in the MAAC makes more sense than the ECC."

Admittedly, the conference needs to improve in its commitment to a few of the non-basketball sports, but there is no reason to feel that the improvement will not come. A conference that still has enormous potential, the MAAC is bound to experience growing pains in the early stages. Assistant Athletic Director Kathy Wear is very pleased with the outlook for the conference. "After a little building this will be a great conference. The potential of the MAAC is enormous, and very exciting. I definitely think the move to this conference was the right one."

Perhaps the moderate words of men's swimming coach John Lyons most accurately reflect the situation. "It is too soon to tell whether or not the switch to the MAAC was a good one or not. I think we should re-evaluate our situation in a few years and see if the optimistic goals for the conference were met. For now, though, I'll do everything I can to support the conference, and make it work."

If everyone in the La Salle Athletic Department could adopt such a willing-to-try attitude, the Metro Atlantic Conference would have a much stronger chance of accomplishing its many goals.

Dennis T. Owens

King of the Hill

Every team moving into a new conference has specific goals it tries to meet. Most goals consist of giving a good impression, thus gaining respect from other teams in that conference. La Salle's 1984 Softball Team is no exception. Not having played any teams in the Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference previously, the La Salle team does not have statistics to help them play better against their conference rivals. All of the teams in this conference are strong teams capable of playing with high caliber intensity. Those who will succeed are the ones who will keep up with the pack, using every opportunity to move themselves closer to the top. The La Salle team hopes to find themselves on top at the end of the season.

Coch Rick Pohlig feels that the team will do well even under such pressure. In his opinion, 1984 should be a good season. There are roughly thirty games scheduled. With the George Mason Tournament during the first weekend of the season and the MAAC Championship play-offs taking place the following weekend at West Point, it is essential for the team to play well from the very beginning. The team has high hopes of doing well at the championship. When the play-offs are over, a rough remainder of the season lies ahead. The team will play on for at least three more weeks, hoping to be considered for NCAA post-season play.

Tennis, Anyone?

"Although tennis is a highly individualized sport, I have learned to work hard, compete, and be successful on a team."

Martin Lupinetti, Co-captain

The 1984 La Salle Men's Tennis Team continues on the path of improvement paved four years ago with the arrival of Coach Jeff Marmon. Consistent progress has been the trademark of La Salle since Marmon combined his hard working style with the fresh new talent the team attracts every year. This year's squad possesses a nice blend of experienced and youthful talent to form a solid group of players. After a very respectable showing at their first MAAC Tournament at Forest Hills, NY, the team has high hopes for a successful spring season. The experience of the Explorers is centered in their senior co-captains Patrick Shanahan and Martin Lupinetti. As doubles partners and key singles players, the tough competitors are heavily relied upon not only for their play but also for their guidance of the younger team members.

Three very talented underclassmen will form the nucleus of this year's team, and be instrumental to the success of teams in years to come. Sophomore Gary Block combines strong strokes with smart strategy, sophomore Wasyl Manko possesses consistency and deceptive quickness, and freshman Mike Holt shows great potential and should immediately contribute to the squad. Another key member of the team is four-year letterman Dan Powers, whose athletic ability presents problems for any opponent. And finally sophomore Bill Smyrhe will be called on to keep La Salle moving forward toward continued improvement.

I Have A Dream . . .

La Salle's move to the Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference was not the only change made by the Athletic Department in the 1983-84 season. There is a new Sports Information Director on campus in the form of Frank Bertucci, former Assistant Sports Information Director at the University of Pennsylvania, who traded Big 5 loyalties in return for the head position here at La Salle. Bertucci took over SID responsibilities on the first day of the Men's Basketball season following the resignation of former Explorer SID Bill Hunt, who accepted a job in Florida.

Bertucci is very pleased with the La Salle community, and their efforts to make his transition a smooth one. "I really like the small town atmosphere here," said Bertucci, "and the cooperation of the faculty as compared to Penn. In my first few weeks at La Salle I met more people than in five years at Penn."

Bertucci is extremely optimistic about La Salle in general, and the sports teams specifically. He should prove to be a valuable asset to the Athletic Department if some of his many ideas are implemented. "I want the coaches and players of the non-revenue, smaller sports to know I will give them as much attention as I give the larger ones. It's the least I can do because the smaller sports certainly deserve to be recognized for their efforts. Also, I would like to make student workers more active in the communication process and involve them to a greater degree to increase effectiveness. Finally, and most importantly, I intend to make the student body less apathetic toward their sports teams by making them more aware."

Good Luck Frank, you'll need it.

Women's Cross Running Strong

More than this, however, he knows how to deal with the women as human beings complete with emotions and feelings, and not just athletic machines. It is Burke's compassion and caring that makes him well-liked and respected among team members. Junior Sheryl Reid, one of the top runners on the team, can't say enough about her coach. "Not only is he great to get along with, but he knows what he's talking about. Coach Burke, unlike our previous coaches, shows great interest in us, which gets us psyched to do a better job." Co-captain Jeanne Bolger is equally zealous in her praise of Burke. "Coach Burke's attitude has definitely rubbed off on the team. Morale is much stronger under him, and the team is more together now than it was before he began coaching us. These factors have definitely affected our success in a positive way."

An obvious question that one might ask is why Burke chose to coach women's sports. As the coach explains, it was not necessarily by design. "I sort of fell into this job. I was helping out with the men's team and an opening with the women's team arose quite suddenly. I had to make a quick decision, and now I'm glad I did. It was a cultural shock to coach women at first. There was much I had to learn. For example, women do not train the same way men do. The physical make-up and emotions of women are very different, which must be taken into account by the coach. As I got involved with the team, I learned the ropes with a lot of help from the girls. I get a lot of satisfaction out of coaching the women's teams here at La Salle because there is a lot of untapped talent to work with, and there is very little recognition of the program. The team needs someone to fight for it, and I'm that person."

Burke continues, "The women I coach are as good as any men's team on campus if they're given the chance. They are certainly willing to work hard for La Salle, but I sometimes question how willing La Salle is to support their efforts. This is definitely an area I'd like to improve in the future."

Though apathy and athletic department funding for such sports as women's cross-country and track have historically been insurmountable obstacles, one definitely gets the impression, as Michael Burke speaks, that he is just the person to break historical trends when he sets his mind to it.

Students as Professionals

Most La Salle undergraduates seem to spend their collegiate careers navigating an exciting, but hazardous, stream, one riddled with rushing rapids and tortuous twists. For seniors, however, faultless navigation is of paramount importance, for before them looms an ominous waterfall of uncertainty, an omnipresent reminder of the sudden and unaccountable vicissitudes they must soon encounter. Above the constant pressures of advanced course work, papers, and exams, continually stands the question, "What will I do after I graduate?"

Some La Salle students have taken advantage of a multi-departmental cooperative education program, or co-op, to help answer that question, and to help ease the transition from full-time school to full-time work. Although the particulars vary from department to department, most co-op students have followed similar procedures to obtain and facilitate their co-ops. For example, an interested student, with the help of Career Planning and Placement, either contracts, or is put into contact with, a company in his or her projected field. The student is interviewed, and if a co-op is offered, the student can work full-time with the company for a period of either three or six months. Co-op students receive three credits and a salary for their work. More importantly, they gain experience in their fields and in the "working world."

Numerous departments offer co-op opportunities, including Communications, Computer Science, and Accounting.

Senior computer science major Janice Rakszawski spent from June to December of her senior year working on a co-op as a programmer with the Federal Reserve Bank of Philadelphia. During that time, Janice lived in the dorms and commuted to work by subway. Because she is not originally from Philadelphia, the chance to commute to Center City gave her an opportunity to explore the city and become accustomed to working in it.

Besides working in town, Janice took one early morning course and worked closely with her co-op advisor. She was required to hand in monthly reports on her work in preparation for a larger report which she completed at the close of her six months. These reports functioned not only to help Janice, but also provided feedback to the Mathematical Sciences Department on what they might do better to help prepare students for employment, and on the quality of the methods they already employ.

Although Janice participated in a co-op as a senior, most students opt to do it during their junior years. Graduating senior Mike Mullin, an accounting major, worked with Arthur Andersen from December to March of his junior year. He worked in the auditing department full time, and because it was the firm's "busy season," he often worked overtime. "Because the possibility of overtime exists, Career Planning often urges accounting co-ops not to roster additional courses."

The nature of Mike's work was somewhat different than Janice's. Because he worked with clients, he traveled from company to company, usually remaining at each for one week. Because Mike lived at home during the time of the co-op, he lost more contact with La Salle for those months than did Janice. Also, Mike kept a journal of his work, instead of handing in monthly projects.

Just as Janice learned to navigate her way through Philadelphia, Mike, because of his traveling, explored much of the Delaware Valley.

Both students feel that there are certain undeniable advantages of co-ops other than gaining experience on the job. For example, as Mike pointed out, getting an interview with a company for a possible co-op is easier than getting an interview for a job, because a co-op does not represent as much of a risk for a company. Many students are offered jobs with the companies with whom they worked. Of course, the possibility of a job offer is an additional pressure on students, because if they are not offered a job after their co-op, other companies may be somewhat wary of hiring them.

Students who apply for co-ops are also more prepared for job interviews, and they may get experience in writing rejection letters if they are offered more than one co-op.

All in all, both Mike and Janice feel that their experiences have been utterly worthwhile. They are both excited about the work they have done, and the experiences that lay before them.

Thus, cooperative education provides an exciting and interesting way of effecting and facilitating the changes a student undergoes when presented with his or her diploma. Hopefully, many more students will benefit from this program, and, in turn, benefit La Salle.

"It's more than a job. It's an adventure."

What exactly is "it?" "It" might very well be the Army, Navy, Air Force or Marines, but, in this case "it" isn't. "It" could refer to a janitor at Three Mile Island, a stunt car driver for "The Dukes of Hazard," or a food critic assigned to review "The Promaine Tavern," the La Salle Cafeteria. But, no, "it" isn't any of these.

So, exactly what is "it?" "It" is the position of "R.A." in the La Salle dorms. What is an "R.A.?" Despite the valiant attempts of certain students to attach new and innovative meanings to the two letters, "R.A." stands for "Resident Assistant."

When a student accepts the position of R.A., he or she is presented with intensive training and voluminous materials in an attempt to acclimate the person to the mission he or she is about to undertake. While helpful, such orientation seldom comes close to the actual realities of the position.

For instance, R.A.'s are told that the job is not a full-time one and that they are students first, R.A.'s second. The personal experiences of R.A.'s dictate otherwise, however. At LSC, the R.A. position is not just a job; it's a way of life. One's life seems to center around the job. One's identity tends to hinge upon the position. When an R.A. enters an apartment party as an invited guest, former friends still give distrustful glances and speculation abounds as to whether or not the party is about to be broken up. It almost seems that, when one accepted the job, two large scarlet (or, perhaps, blue and gold) letters, "R" and "A," were emblazoned upon one's chest.

Also, in orientation, examples of situations which probably will be encountered during the course of the job are given. While new staff members gasp in fear and horror, returning staff members merely chuckle with wry smiles upon their faces. Why? The returning staff realizes one thing that the new staff can't possibly know. The actual situations seen in the position are three, perhaps four times as strange, as warped, as bizarre as the examples given by the Resident Life Office. Indeed, virtually every possible type of disaster situation known to man, both natural and man-made, has been encountered by the Resident Life staff. (Note: Some of the man-made ones have been quite unnatural and previously unknown to man.) Regarding those few that have yet to be seen in the dorms, probability and the creative/destructive powers of the La Salle resident student suggest that they too will be seen in the near future.

This piece is not to suggest, however, that the R.A. position is an entirely headache-filled one. Rather, it is an often rewarding and enriching job. Almost every R.A. would agree that, despite the occasional problems associated with the position, the R.A.'s job is a good one (even if the pay isn't that great) and the experiences gained from the position are irreplaceable and extremely worthwhile.

Getting into Med School . . . A Long First Step

Senior year is traditionally the time when most college students begin to think seriously about what they will be doing after graduation, and they find themselves busily completing resumes. Students interested in careers in the health professions, however, get a start early in their junior year.

In addition to preparing for the necessary standardized tests (MCAT, DAT, OCAT) — day-long tests consisting of questions ranging from Biology to Chemistry, Physics, Quantitative Skills and Reading — each student who plans to attend medical, dental, optometry or podiatry school is assigned an advisor. These advisors are members of the Committee on Applicants to the Health Professions, which includes Bro. James Muldoon (Chairman), Dr. Marjorie Allen, Bro. Joseph Burke, Bro. Richard Hawley, Dr. George Stow, Dr. Ralph Tekel and Dr. Ralph Thornton. The Committee membership spans the Arts and Sciences since preparation for the health professions requires successful work in all areas. The advisors' role is to represent their applicants before the Committee, to answer any questions the student may have about the application process, and to try to prepare the student for an interview.

The Committee requests an autobiographical sketch in which each person gives the reasons for his or her choice of a career in one of the health professions. In addition, evaluations from faculty members and others who can comment on the applicant's initiative, judgment, communicative skills, motivation, and maturity are requested. A minimum of seven appraisals is generally requested.

The Committee as a whole usually meets early in the summer and again in the fall; a student's file is reviewed and a recommendation is made. The Committee's opinion is expressed in a letter written by the advisor and sent to the schools of the student's choice. It is then that the tedious and seemingly never ending process of filling out applications can begin and, finally, almost one year later, the pre-professional student, like the majority of college seniors, has only to wait for an interview!

Recognizing Effort and Achievement

When you look at the academic calendar (if you look at the academic calendar) for the fall semester, you may notice that La Salle holds a "Convocation" at the end of October, but you may not know exactly what that is. It may not even sound very important, but in fact it is one of the most significant ways in which the College honors members of the community both on and off campus. During ceremonies in the College Union Ballroom, La Salle recognizes the students on the three Dean's Lists and confers honorary degrees on prominent individuals.

The first part of the program consists of the presentation of the honors students to the assembled faculty, parents, and friends. All students on the lists have a cumulative average of 3.40 or higher, and those who are present at the assembly have their names read aloud by the dean of their school.

The second part of the program is the conferring of honorary degrees. Traditionally, each Convocation has a specific theme. Honorees are chosen to exemplify that theme and are sponsored for a degree by a faculty member or a member of the College's Board of Trustees. Suggestions from the college community are encouraged, but candidates are ultimately chosen by the Board according to three guidelines: professional excellence, national or regional prominence, and a perspective that is comparable with the College's Catholic philosophy.

This year, La Salle awarded honorary degrees to three men who are prominent in the field of health care. Dr. C. Everett Koop, the Surgeon General of the United States, and Msgr. James T. McDonough, a former director of the Archdiocese of Philadelphia's Catholic Social Services both received Doctor of Law degrees. Dr. Edward J. Stremmler, Dean of the Pennsylvania School of Medicine and a graduate of La Salle, was granted a Doctor of Science degree.

A buffet reception for honorees, students, faculty, and guests followed the ceremonies.

P.S.: If you've never seen your favorite faculty member in complete academic attire, the Convocation is your chance.

In Memoriam

Brian P. Hample

If a successful life is one that is judged to have inspired others in this world, then that of Brian Hample is a model for us all. With what turned out to be a short time at La Salle, Brian indeed taught many of us a great deal. To his fellow students in the Biology Department, Brian exhibited a dedication to the academic, as well as a spirit of cooperation in study and in learning. It was never a surprise for Brian to bring an intense study session to a halt with his terrific wit. His academic success was an inspiration to his fellow students, as well as to his professors.

Brian did not neglect the social facet of his education, with involvement in many extracurricular activities. He was one of the Founding Fathers of the fraternity Phi Gamma Delta, working to ensure that service was an integral part of the foundation of the fraternity. His contribution to the FGD Fraternity exhibited many of Brian's well-rounded characteristics, with his loyalty, his dedication, and his scholarship serving as goals for his brothers to attain.

Perhaps one aspect of Brian's life that has inspired me the most was his sense of humility. Brian was truly a great man. He had tremendous potential in academics, which was leading him into the medical profession. He was a man with numerous talents, a terrific wit, and an appealing charm. But Brian was in no way pretentious. Perhaps it was his humility that has presented itself as an inspiration to all of his friends at La Salle. Perhaps it is the pride that we share in having had Brian as our friend. Nevertheless, Brian Hample, as fellow student, as fraternity brother, as loyal friend, was surely someone who led a successful life; one that has inspired many, and one that many will never forget.

LaSalle in the Neighborhood

On the first anniversary of La Salle/Northeast, the inaugural branch of the La Salle Evening Division's Off-Campus Program, the College enrolled 126 students in several undergraduate and MBA courses at Friends Select School at 17th and the Parkway in Philadelphia's Center City. Called by its neighborhood, La Salle/Franklintown was opened in 1978.

By 1981 the Off-Campus centers at George Washington High School and Friends Select were established successes. Mr. John J. King was appointed director of the Program and the College was enjoying a steady enrollment pattern from the neighborhoods, so that as the early enrollees continued their degree requirements at the 20th and Olney campus, new recruits replaced them.

Ready to expand again, La Salle/Bucks opened in the Fall of 1981 with 220 undergraduate and graduate students in classrooms at Archbishop Wood High

The 20th Street entrance is the campus thoroughfare for the few lucky vehicles permitted to park on the main grounds. Most of the community foots ir through the gate.

Whether music-making in Olney 100 or lecture-listening in the Dunleavy Assembly Room, students enjoy a variety of opportunities to enhance their education.

Shakespeare is fine reading, but it takes a Royal Shakespeare Company actress to enliven the poetry. Jennie Stoller, one of five actors-in-residence at La Salle in October, directs a class through some of the Bard's best stuff.

Dispatching an escort, Off. Vance Morgan smilingly fulfills the College's security needs.

Taking time out from maintaining the College Union, John Bilson finds brief respite in the office of the Evening Collegian.

School for Boys on Yorks Road in Warminster.

In fulfilling its first slogan, "La Salle Comes to You", the Program aggressively recruited from its potential markets through direct mailings, strategic advertising, and enthusiastic word of mouth. Established to offset dwindling enrollment, the program has been a significant enrollment retainer since its inception seven years ago.

As La Salle established itself in the neighborhood it attracted an otherwise reluctant population to return to or begin a college education. In an informal survey of ten seniors who initially attended La Salle at one of the off-campus sites, five said they probably would have delayed their college educations without the convenience of a La Salle/Northeast or La Salle/Franklinstown.

One management major who took her first four courses at La Salle/Northeast said, "I was apprehensive about attending college and I dreaded the idea of being lost on campus. But when I got the mailing about the classes at Archbishop Ryan, I wasn't so wary. Once I became acquainted with the people — and the people are just great! — it was much easier for me to attend class at 20th and Olney."

La Salle's Franklinstown off-campus site is housed in the Friends Select School at 17th Street and the Parkway. MDA students are attracted to the location because of its convenience to Center City.

Indeed, the strongest link between the main campus and an off-campus site is the people. The administrators under whose care the program successfully operates are John J. King, director; Mary McGlynn, coordinator of La Salle/Northeast; Dennis McCarthy, site administrator at La Salle/Bucks, and Edythe Barras and Terry Carrapos (receptionists at Northeast and Bucks).

For the Northeast, Bucks and Franklinstown campuses the La Salle that "comes to you" arrives in the persons of these administrators. Commuting each class evening to their off-campus duties they carry with them not only the requisite forms and information, but the personal approach to education that the Evening Division strives to perfect. So, although neither of the sites can offer the facilities available at the main campus, it does offer the same spirit and dedication to its students.

La Salle's neighborly approach has been mutually rewarding for the college and its students. And, as in any neighborhood, regardless of its location or the size of its homes, the quality of life is measured by the interest and care of its people. La Salle's reputation has always been secured by the special relationship its administrators and faculty have nurtured with their students and at whatever address, students consistently testify to "the people" as making the real difference in their educations.

Two perspectives

Tom Essig and Victoria Tomshaw have little in common. They are two students from the class of '84 who were asked to share something about themselves and their time at La Salle.

Their perspectives are appreciably dissimilar. Tom is an English major with two small girls. His wife Debbie is expecting a third child this year. A team leader of technicians at the Defense Industrial Supply Center, Tom lives in Olney. Victoria, who graduates with a degree in nursing, is a registered nurse who works emergency room duty from 11 P.M. to 7 A.M. at Chestnut Hill Hospital. She's single and lives in Wyncore.

Tom is a confessed "pretender to the verse." Inspired by one of the greatest, T.S. Eliot, he attempts to work out his poetic aspirations with his own variations of The Wasteland. Tom enrolled in La Salle as a management major in 1976 but switched to English when he found the business curriculum confining. The study of literature, he says, "encompasses it all. It is the wisdom of our culture."

By challenging some courses and transferring some credits from Chestnut Hill College Victoria finished her degree requirements in four years. She was attracted to La Salle because "it offered something different and treated nurses intelligently." She also had faith in the solid reputation of Gloria Donnelly, the nursing program's director. She enthusiastically endorses the program and has found her expectations met by a thorough and challenging experience. She has recruited four students for the college.

Tom and Victoria would both like to pursue graduate work. Tom, however, would forsake further degree work for a chance "to get on the floor and play with the kids. The kids come first," Victoria says she will probably wait a year before enrolling in the University of Pennsylvania's graduate program.

Tom thinks Shakespeare should be mandatory for all students and Victoria wishes she had taken some computer courses, which she still might do.

They have their differences, but what these two express in common is an unqualified commendation for the La Salle people who have enriched their respective educations. Says Tom: "The counselors helped get me through," and "The faculty is excellent. Excellent." Victoria echoes the sentiment: "The nursing program its people, and it's the people who have made my education so rewarding."

C & L Speakers Examine Orwell's 1984

The theme for the 1983-84 Concert and Lecture Series was "George Orwell's 1984: The Fiction and the Reality." The significance of Orwell's novel and the approach of the year 1984 suggested this theme. Mr. Gerald Johnson, Director of Special Programs, stated that "enough topics were suggested by Orwell's work that we could still have some variety in the series." These topics included the areas of politics, communications, psychology, religion, and sociology.

Themes are chosen by a committee consisting of Mr. Johnson, an Administrative representative, three faculty members, and four students.

Dr. Robert Bellah, Ford Professor of Sociology and Comparative Studies at the University of California, Berkeley, spoke on October 4, 1983 on "The Dangers of Soft Despotism: 1984 and After." This talk, co-sponsored by the Philosophy Department, centered on Alexis de Tocqueville's book, Democracy in America, written 150 years ago.

Soft despotism was described by Tocqueville as a "kind of orderly, gentle, peaceful slavery." Rather than torment men, it would degrade them. It would occur partially because men become involved in chasing after petty pleasures and become unaware of the rest of the world. A centralized, administrative government would be able to soften, bend, and guide the will of such men. Soft despotism would stifle, prevent, and restrain rather than destroy.

The danger lies in the combination of the centralization of government and industry with the individualistic citizen pursuing material well-being and becoming isolated in small circles of family and friends. Since the citizens are so isolated, they cannot offer effective resistance to this form of control.

Bellah spoke about Tocqueville's suggested ways of setting up roadblocks to soft despotism. He felt that individualism, which he defined as "a calm and considered feeling which disposes each to isolate himself from the mass of his fellows," was the deepest threat to our freedom. Three institutions were singled out as the most critical: religion, family, and politics. Although they still act primarily as forces against soft despotism, all three of these spheres have been undermined by individualism. Bellah stated that his purpose was to sound a note of alarm about this trend, which may become a serious threat to our freedom.

John Rodden spoke here on October 6, 1983 on "George Orwell: An Extremely Brief Introduction to the Man and his Work." Now completing a dissertation on Orwell at the University of Virginia, Rodden is a 1978 graduate of La Salle. His talk was co-sponsored by the Honors Program.

Rodden concerned himself primarily with pointing out the differences between Orwell and his work. He discussed the term "Orwellian language," which may mean corruptive language such as that put forth by the Ministry of Truth in 1984 or the clear prose written by Orwell himself. This term is an excellent example of the confusion between the man and the work.

Rodden then examined the critical and popular reputation of Orwell, which has added to the confusion. Orwell's impact has touched areas such as communications, journalism, sociology, and even popular music.

Most people know very little about Orwell's life. Born Eric Arthur Blair in 1903, he was educated at an English prep

"The words ambiguity and contradictoriness symbolize the saintly sinister status of George Orwell's life and legacy today . . . Turn him one way and see the paragon, a second and see the patriot, a third and see a psychological prisoner, a fourth and see a doomsday prophet, a fifth and see a rebel."

school and at Eton College. After graduation, he followed in his father's footsteps and entered the Indian Imperial Police in Burma. Upon returning five years later, he decided to become a writer. After publishing several books, such as the Road to Wigan Pier, he went to Spain and took part in the Spanish Civil War. For a time, he worked for the BBC and wrote many essays and articles. He achieved his greatest successes with Animal Farm in 1945 and 1984 in 1949. He died in 1950.

Various images of Orwell appeared after his death. He was seen as a patriot, a paragon, a psychological prisoner, a prophet, and a rebel. These differing views may be attributed to many things: Orwell's request that no biography of him be written, the timing of his publications with world events, promotions by various influential voices, and the media's adoption of his slogans.

"We see American religion, family, and political participation as still alive and vital, still capable of fending off the pressures, driving out the core of soft despotism. Yet we find every one of these spheres endangered and a people partially crippled by the individualism they should be defending against."

"Orwell adopted socialism because it was the only coherent philosophy that held out hope for a change within a free political framework . . . His socialism was one opposed to all forms of inequality, hatred or privilege, one that sought a fairer distribution of the nations' wealth and resources, and one that called for resistance to fascism."

Dr. John Rossi, Professor of History, spoke on "Orwell and the Left" on October 27, 1983. Dr. Rossi discussed Orwell's view of his fellow socialists and his relationship with the political left.

Orwell was a reluctant convert to Socialism and was always skeptical about his fellow socialists. He was alienated from the English intelligentsia due to his choice of serving in the Indian Imperial Police after Eton, and his later clerk-like jobs. In his book, Road to Wigan Pier, he attacked the personal flaws of his fellow socialists. He never became comfortable with many of them, and they regarded him as highly unreliable.

His perception of socialism was colored by his experiences with the down-and-out. He had a romanticized view of the working class and feared the power worshippers who would build a system at the expense of the people they were building it for. He feared power in general, especially in the hands of those who were not held answerable for their actions. He attacked the socialists for their specific aims and programs to obtain this power. Orwell himself favored internal reform of the morals of mankind.

His major area of dispute with the socialists was in his antagonistic view of communism, which began as early as 1935. This view was partially due to the fact that most of the communists that Orwell knew were intellectual types. He learned firsthand about communism when he fought in Spain, but found it difficult to publish anti-communist works in England. Part of his reaction to communism was also due to patriotism.

The gap between Orwell and the left widened with the publication of Animal Farm, warning of the possibility of corrupt revolutions. Orwell found it extremely difficult to find a publisher for this book and was attacked critically for his cynicism. 1984 added to the tension. Although he was a hero for some socialists, he remained a flawed and unreliable one.

Professor Arthur R. Miller of Harvard Law School spoke on "Media versus Privacy — Clash of Fundamental Rights" on November 17, 1983. He discussed the problems involved in balancing the rights of freedom of speech and privacy of the individual, which are on a collision course.

Professor Miller began by examining each of these rights separately, looking into their background and applications. Freedom of speech is listed in the First Amendment. The media has, in the past, done very impressive work in bringing important issues before the public, especially in the Watergate hearings and the reports on Vietnam.

Privacy is not specifically mentioned in the Constitution. However, it is the basis for such rights as freedom from unreasonable searches and seizures, freedom to associate, freedom to choose your religion and political party, and privacy of the body.

Why are these rights now colliding? One reason is the aggressive journalism that has been present since Watergate. Another is the new technology which allows us to receive news live, adding to the power of the media. A third is the heightened concern of the American public about their privacy. Part of this concern is due to the loss of personal contact and individuality in the computer age. The image of Big Brother has come close to reality in the minds of Americans.

Journalists feel they are entitled to many privileges in order to inform the public. They want access to all information and they want to use whatever methods are necessary to gain that access. The media also wants the absolute right to publish anything that is true, and they do not want anyone to second-guess their judgments about newsworthiness.

What will be the final result of this conflict? Miller feels that journalists must engage in self-restraint to prevent government involvement. In this way, we will continue to strike a balance, allowing us to enjoy the fruits of free press and of privacy.

"Two of our rights, and, in fact, two of our most fundamental rights, are on a collision course . . . The first is the right of free speech, certainly an important right. It is sometimes called 'the right of the people to know.' The other right is the right of privacy, which is also called 'the right of the individual to be left alone.' Now just listen to that and you can see, you can feel, you can sense the conflict."

The theme of "George Orwell's 1984: The Fiction and the Reality" continued in the spring semester. Scheduled speakers included Mark Crispin Miller, Michael Harrington, Irving Howe, Brother Joseph Burke, Edward Herman, Brother Gabriel Moran, Stanley Milgram, and Ihor Sevcenko.

In addition, the Gavel Society read Brother Daniel Burke's "1984 in the City," and the Gavel and Collegium Musicum presented songs and readings.
